Sumner, Albert. See WARREN, DAVID M., No. 2.

Sumner, Bradford, a native of Taunton, Mass., graduated at Brown University, 1808, was a tutor in that institution, 1809-11, and subsequently became a counsellor-at-law at Boston. 1. Oration, July 4, 1828, Bost., 1828, 8vo 2. Address before the Massachusetts Peace Society, 1831, 1831, 8vo.

Sumner, Charles, LL.D., son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (infra), was b. in Boston, Jan. 6, 1811, fitted for college at the Boston Latin School, and graduated at Harvard, 1830; entered the Law School at Cambridge, 1831, was admitted to the Bar at Worcester in the same year, and commenced practice at Boston, 1834, when he was appointed Reporter of the Circuit Court, delivered lectures to the law-students at Cambridge, 1835, '36, '37, '43, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 189, 216, 281, 297, 430,) but declined overtures for the successorship to Judge Story's chair, after his decease, travelled in Europe in 1837-40, '57, '58; succeeded Daniel Webster as United States Senator, 1851, and still (1870) occupies that position. Before his admission to the Bar he became the chief editor of the American Jurist, and contributed to it, among other papers, a valuable article on Legal Bibliography, (in vol. xii.: see Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 6;) as Librarian of the Harvard Law Library, he prepared a Catalogue of the Books in that institution, 1834, 8vo, pp. 228, he edited, with Appendix and Indexes, Andrew Dunlap's Treatise on the Practice of the Courts of Admiralty in Civil Causes of Maritime Jurisdiction, Phila., 1846 8vo, (see N. Amer.

Rev., xlii. 72, by G. S. Hillard;) as Reporter, he published Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Circuit Court of the United States for the First Circuit, from May Term, 1829, to May Term, 1839, Bost., 3 vols. 8vo, 1830-41, 2d ed., 1848-49-51, (see 18 Leg. Obs., 414; 3 Law Rep., 403; GALLISON, JOHN; STORY, JOSEPH, LL.D.); and, in conjunction with J. C. Perkins, edited Vesey Jr.'s (see VESSEY, FRANCIS, JR.) Chancery Reports, 1844-45, 20 vols. 8vo, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 474.) To these important services are to be added an able defence (written in Paris at the request of Governor Lewis Cass, and published in Galignani's Messenger, &c.) of the American Claim in the North-Eastern Boundary controversy with England, and the suggestion to Mr. Wheaton of a work on the Law of Nations,—since carried into effect by the well-known treatise (see WHEATON, HENRY, LL.D., No. 10) of the latter gentleman. Having thus discharged the debt which every lawyer is said, on high authority, to owe to his profession, Mr. Sumner has felt at liberty to devote all the treasures of his learning and all the vigour of his eloquence to the promotion of universal freedom in America, and the spread of peace, justice, and truth among all nations. Perhaps the best-known of his orations, addresses, and speeches are the following: 1. The True Grandeur of Nations, July 4, 1845, Bost., 1845, 8vo; 2d ed., 1845, pp. 96, Phila., 1847, 8vo. 5 or 6 edits., at least, were pub. in London. See N. Amer. Rev., lxi. 518, Chris Exam, xxxix. 437, Story's Life and Letters, ii. 543, Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 43. Also highly commended by Chancellor Kent, Rogers the poet, Chambers's Edin Jour., &c. 2. The Scholar, the Jurist, the Artist, the Philanthropist, Aug. 27, 1846, 2d ed., Bost., 1846, 8vo, pp. 72. Commemorative of Pickering, Story, Allston, and Channing. See N. Amer. Rev., lxv. 254. Commended by J. Q. Adams, Chancellor Kent, &c. 3. Fame and Glory, Aug. 11, 1847, 1847, 8vo. See Bost. Liv. Age, xvii. 415, (from Chambers's Edin. Jour.) Sumner on True Glory. 4. White Slavery in the Barbary States, 1847, 1847, 8vo. He subsequently published a small volume with the same title, 1853, 12mo, new ed., 12mo, which was commended in Westm. Rev., July, 1853, Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 455, and Lon. Athen., 1853, 476. 5. Law of Human Progress, 1848, 1848, 8vo. 6. The War System of the Commonwealth of Nations, May 28, 1849, 1849, 8vo, pp. 71. Commended by Lon. Herald of Peace, Jan. 1850. 7. Freedom National, Slavery Sectional, on his Motion to Repeal the Fugitive Slave Bill, Aug. 26, 1852, Wash., 1852, 8vo, pp. 31. See *N. Brit. "We have in our possession many of Mr. Sumner's speeches; and we confess that, for depth and accuracy of thought, for fullness of historical information, and for a species of gigantic morality which treads all sophistry under foot and rushes at once to the right conclusion, we know not a single orator, speaking the English tongue, who ranks as his superior"—Edin. Jour.

"May I suggest to you to purchase, read, and study two volumes just published, of Charles Sumner's Orations and Speeches? You will find them full of the most noble views and inspiring sentiments. I could ask a young man, just entering public life, nothing better than to form his conduct after the high models there presented"—HORACE MANN, Washington, Dec. 1850

We select these as specimens of the many eulogies of a similar character, from foreign and domestic authorities, which now lie before us

"The Hon. Charles Sumner has recently presented to the library of Harvard College a collection of valuable pamphlets, making in all more than 400 volumes. This is no new thing for Mr. Sumner to do. For a long series of years Mr. Sumner has been a benefactor of the library, and within five years he has given to it more than 7000 pamphlets and 1000 volumes, among which are many of great value, which could not have been otherwise procured."—Oct. 1867

Sumner, Charles Pinckney, father of the preceding, and son of Major Job Sumner, a distinguished officer of the Revolutionary Army, was b. at Milton, Mass., Jan. 20, 1776; graduated at Harvard College, 1796, and subsequently studied law under the guidance of Josiah Quincy; appointed High-Sheriff of the County of Suffolk, 1825, and retained this post by successive appointments until his resignation, a few days before his decease, which occurred April 24, 1839. 1. *The Compass. There has been recently issued: John Milton: a Vindication, especially from the Charge of Arrianism, by J. W. Morris, Lon., 1862, 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 627. Since we wrote our article on Milton, other MSS. found in the packet discovered by Mr. Lemon have been printed, in a volume entitled Original Papers illustrative of the Life and Writings of John Milton; including Sixteen Letters of State written by Him. Now first Published from MSS. in the State Paper Office, by W. Douglas Hamilton, Lon., 1859, sm. 4to, (Camden Soc.) See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 810; Lon. Critic, 1860, 108.

Sumner, George, Professor of Botany at Trinity College, Hartford, was b. at Pomfret, Conn., Dec. 19, 1793, graduated at Yale College, 1813, and M.D. at Philadelphia, 1817; settled at Hartford, 1819; d. Feb. 20, 1855. Compendium of Physiological and Systematic Botany, Hartford, 1820, 12mo.

Sumner, George, son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (supra), was b. in Boston, Feb. 5, 1817, studied at Heidelberg and Berlin, and resided many years abroad, occupied in travelling in Europe, Asia, and Africa,—devoting especial attention to international laws, and to the codes, politics, institutions, and philanthropic organizations of each country. He d. at Boston, Oct. 6, 1863. As an author, he was favourably known by articles in French, German, and English periodicals, (Journal des Débats, Allgemeine Zeitung, North American Review, Democratic Review, &c.) some of which have been published in several languages, and by a number of valuable monographs. We notice the following: 1. Memoirs of the Pilgrims at Leyden; an Address delivered at Cambridge, Mass., 1845, pub. in Mass. Hist. Soc. Coll., vol. ix, 3d Series.

"A more accurate research than was ever before made has been instituted by our ingenious countryman, Mr. George Sumner, into the condition of the Pilgrims at Leyden."—EDWARD KERRICK Orations and Speeches, ii. 484.

See, also, Hist. Mag., 1859, 261, 292, 330, 332, 357; 1860, 4, 64.

2. The Pennsylvania System of Prison-Discipline Triumphant in France, Phila., 1847, 8vo, again, 1851. 1st ed. was printed as a Boston City Document, 1847. The "triumph" of this system in Europe is partially owing to Mr. Sumner's zealous and intelligent advocacy of it. 3. An Address on the Progress of Reform in France, 1853. 4. An Oration delivered before the Municipal Authorities of the City of Boston, July 4, 1859, Bost., 1859, 8vo, pp. 67; 3d ed., 1859.

"This is an admirable address,—simple in style, large in thought, mighty in matter, and moderate in tone."—E. P. WHIPPLE N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1859, 558.

See, also, Hist. Mag., 1859, 323. The Opinione, the leading journal of Turin, declared the Oration to be "nobly generous to Italy,—honourable to Boston and to America."

The New York edition of Lamartine's History of the Girondists contains a reply by Mr. Sumner to the author's attack on the United States.

In Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1858–60, 422, will be found a Letter of Mr. Sumner's to the poet Longfellow on the character of Washington Irving. The following has since been published.

"George Sumner has been twice up here . . . I really was heartily glad to meet him again, for he is altogether one of the most curiously instructed American travellers that I have ever met with."—WASHINGTON IRVING. Sunnyside, Sept. 20, 1852 Life and Letters, iv (1864) 119.

Although known to be a zealous defender of American institutions, Mr. Sumner was often consulted by foreign Governments on questions of political economy; and publicists, statistes, and statisticians of all countries were made welcome to the valuable results of his intelligent cosmopolitanism.

"Mr. Sumner is a man of superior intelligence, very accomplished, perfectly familiar with all European affairs, and knowing the different parties and politics of Europe much better than any European with whom I am acquainted."—ALEXIS C. H. C. DE TOCQUEVILLE Letter to General Cavaignac.

"I accept his researches with confidence, for I have verified the precision and accuracy which he brings to all labours."—BARON F. H. ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

See, also, Humboldt's Letter to Sumner, Paris, May 19, 1845.

"The emperor Nicholas reposed more confidence in him for information on this country than on any other American."—LORING'S Hundred Boston Orators, 1854, 332, (q. v.)

With such disqualifications for political favour, and the additional misfortune of familiarity with foreign tongues, we need not marvel that he was never invited to represent his Government at a French, German, or Russian court.

But at home, among the people, as well as abroad, Mr. Sumner's oral instructions were highly valued: from November 1 to March 15, 1860, he gave no less than one hundred and two lectures in cities and towns of the United States. To his labours, in conjunction with those of Dr. S. G. Howe, we owe the establishment in America of Schools for Idiots. His Essay on the subject, first printed in the Legislature of Massachusetts, was published in French (in Annales de la Charité) at Paris and in Italian at Turin.

"The text of our authorised translation is not given in this Commentary, which is equally adapted for the family and the study, and embodies the results of the author's labours for about forty years. . . . Many valuable elucidations of difficult passages will be found in this work, which are passed over in larger commentaries. The reflections at the end of each chapter are characterized by simplicity of diction combined with earnest piety"—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 266.

Swift, Jonathan, D.D., November 30, 1667-October 19, 1745, a descendant of an ancient Yorkshire family, was the grandson of the Rev. Thomas Swift, Vicar of Goodrich, Herefordshire, (husband of Elizabeth Dryden, aunt of Dryden the poet,) and the son of Jonathan Swift, Steward of the King's Inns, Dublin, "that renowned city," remarks our author, "where (abst. invidia) I had the honour to draw my first breath," an event which occurred seven months after his father's death. "As to my native country," writes Swift, on another occasion, "I happened, indeed, by a perfect accident to be born here, my mother being left here from returning to her home at Leicester, and I was a year old before I was sent to England; and thus I am a Teague, or an Irishman, or what people please, although the best part of my life was in England"—Letter to Mr. Grant, March 23, 1733-4. Scott's Swift, xviii 203.

It will be observed that this statement is not altogether candid. With what propriety a birth in a place of permanent family residence is called, in Swift's sense, "a perfect accident," it is difficult to determine. Nor does the Dean speak more truly when he alleges that he was "sent to England when a year old." He was stolen to England by his too affectionate nurse, who returned to her home at Whitehaven, by request of a dying relative, bearing with her a charge too precious to be left behind. Rather than permit the child to run the hazard of a second voyage, the mother consented to let him remain where he was for nearly three years, after which period he was restored to her in Dublin. But we are sorry to say that this was not the only fiction of which the unwilling Irishman was guilty upon this to him unwelcome theme.

"Dr. Swift," remarks one of his most intimate and valued friends, "has told me that he was born in the town of Leicester, and that his father was minister of a parish in Herefordshire."—Pope Spenser, Singer's ed., 1820, 161.

When dissatisfied with Ireland, he would often exclaim, "I am not of this vile country, I am an Englishman." Yet at times he was known to point out the very house (No. 7 Hoey's Court) in Dublin where he first drew breath. But he certainly did not consider that this "perfect accident" deprived him of the right to call himself an Englishman.

"I may observe," says a late eminent historian, "that, to the best of my belief, Swift never, in any thing that he wrote, used the word Irishman to denote a person of Anglo-Saxon race born in Ireland. He no more considered himself as an Irishman, than an Englishman born at Calcutta considers himself as a Hindoo."—LORD MACAULAY Hist. of England, iii ch. xviii, n.

At six years of age Swift was placed at school at Kilkenny, and on the 24th of April, 1682, was received as pensioner of Trinity College, Dublin, where he probably had a scholarship, as he remained there until 1688, when, on the breaking out of the Rebellion, he emigrated to Leicester, where his mother had for some years lived on the charity of her English relations. In Ireland, after the death of her husband, her family (Swift, and a daughter, a little older than himself,—afterwards Mrs. Fenton,—were her only children) had been dependent upon her two brothers-in-law, Godwin and William Swift, both settled in that country. At college Swift distinguished himself indeed, but it was by the contempt of rules, defiance of authorities, neglect of studies, and the consequent penalties and censures with which these grave offences were visited. It was only specialis gratia that, February 15, 1685, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Among the English relations of his mother was the wife of Sir William Temple, and in a few months after Swift's arrival in Leicester this connection led to the reception of the youth in the great man's family, in the capacity of secretary to the retired statesman. Here, for the first two years at least, his position was not the most pleasant that can be imagined.

"An eccentric, uncomely, disagreeable young Irishman, who had narrowly escaped plucking at Dublin, attended Sir William as an amanuensis, for board and twenty pounds a year; dined at the second table, wrote bad verses in praise of his employer, and made love to a very pretty dark-eyed young girl who waited as Lady Giffard. Little did Temple imagine that the coarse exterior of his dependent concealed a genius equally suited to politics and to letters,—a genius destined to shake great kingdoms, to stir the laughter and the rage of millions, and to leave to posterity memorials which can perish only with the English language. Little did he think that the situation in his servants' hall, which he perhaps scarcely deigned to make the subject of a jest, was the beginning of a long unprosperous love which was to be as widely famed as the passion of Petrarch or of Abelard. Sir William's secretary was Jonathan Swift, Lady Giffard's waiting-maid was poor Stella."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Sir William Temple: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838, 178. repub. in his Essays.

"His spirit had been bowed down, and might seem to have been broken, by calamities and humiliations. The language which he was in the habit of holding to his patron, as far as we can judge from the specimens which still remain, was that of a lackey, or rather of a beggar. [Note: See Swift's Letter to Temple of Oct. 6, 1694.] A sharp word or a cold look of the master sufficed to make the servant miserable during several days. [Note: Journal to Stella, Letter XIX.] But this tameness was merely the tameness with which a tiger, caught, caged, and starved, submits to the keeper who brings him food. The humble menial was at heart the haughtiest, the most aspiring, the most vindictive, the most despotic, of men."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. ch. xix.

"It was at Shene and at Moor Park, with a salary of twenty pounds and a dinner at the upper servants' table, that this great and lonely Swift passed a ten years' apprenticeship—worn, a casock that was only not a livery—bent down a knee as proud as Lucifer's to supplicate my lady's good graces or run on his honour's errands. It was here, as he was writing at Temple's table, or following his patron's walk, that he saw and heard the men who had governed the great world,—measured himself with them, looking up from his silent cover, ganged their brains, weighed their wits, turned them, and tried them, and marked them. Ah, what platitudes he must have heard! what feeble jokes! what pompous commonplaces! what small men they must have seemed, under those enormous periwigs, to the swarthy, uncouth, silent Irish secretary. I wonder whether it ever struck Temple that that Irishman was his master? I suppose that dismal conviction did not present itself under the ambrosial wig, or Temple could never have lived with Swift. Swift sickened, rebelled, left the service, ate humble pie and came back again, and so for ten years went on, gathering learning, swallowing scorn, and submitting with a stealthy rage to his fortune."—TRACKEY: English Humourists of the Eighteenth Century: a Series of Lectures: Swift.

See, also, his Lecture on Charity and Humour, appended to N. York ed. of his Lectures. We have allowed this lively raconteur to anticipate the regular course of our narrative. Installed as secretary, Swift devoted himself to study, and soon acquired a large stock of historical information and some knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics.

After about two years' residence with Sir William, he made a short visit to Ireland for the benefit of his health: "a surfeit of stone-fruit" (such is his explanation) had resulted in attacks of giddiness and other disorders, from which he suffered, more or less, to the end of his days.

On his return to Moor Park he was pleased to find himself treated with more consideration by a patron who had been taught the value of his company by its temporary deprivation. King William's fondness for Temple's society brought him frequently to the Park, and he took enough notice of the scribe to arouse ambitious hopes which the monarch never took the pains to gratify. He, however, taught the secretary how to out and eat asparagus (of which the sovereign seems to have been as fond as he was of "green peas") in the Dutch manner, a lesson which the Dean, in more prosperous days, was not unwilling to rehearse for the benefit of his oft-instructed guests,—and offered him the captaincy of a troop of horse,—an honour which was not accepted. After Swift had taken orders, William promised Temple that the divine should have a prebend of Canterbury or Westminster; but with the death of the patron died all the monarch's interest in the dependant.

In 1692 Swift entered himself of Hart Hall, Oxford, for the purpose of taking his degree of M.A., which he received on July 4th of that year. Shortly afterwards he left Sir William's roof, after a cold parting from that gentleman; October 18, 1694, he was admitted to deacon's orders; January 13, 1695, he took priest's orders; and the prebend of Kilroot, in the diocese of Connor, Ireland, bestowed by Lord Capel, enabled him to enter upon the duties of the pastorate. In the same year, (1695,) however, at the request of Temple, he again took up his residence at Moor Park, and there remained until the death of the former, January 27, 1698. He left his companion a legacy and any profit which might arise from the publication of his posthumous works,—which Swift gave to the world, London, 1700-3, 3 vols. 8vo. We have not yet, however, done with Moor Park: it was here during his second term of residence) that he contracted an intimacy which exercised a powerful influence upon the future lives of himself, the object of his attentions, and a later admirer of his shining parts. Miss Esther Johnson, better known as Stella, resided with her mother, a companion of Lady Giffard, (Sir William Temple's sister,) at Moor Park. The secretary (he was in 1695 about thirty, his pupil thirteen) directed her studies, and soon taught her the art to love. Her future history will be found detailed at length by the biographers of Swift. Suffice it here to say that, after many years of painful experience of the peculiarities of her strange lover, she died in Dublin, January 28, 1728. It has been generally supposed that she was privately married to Swift in 1716, in the garden of the deanery, by the Bishop of Clogher. Yet in her will, drawn up as late as December, 1727, she describes herself as Esther Johnson, spinster. Now that we have entered upon the history of Swift's loves, let us dispatch the subject in a few words.

Varina, a predecessor of Stella's, was the title by which Swift designated Miss Jane Warying, who first declined his proposals, and then herself made overtures which were received in a style which at once closed all negotiations between the parties. Vanessa was the poetical name of Miss Esther Vanhomrigh, who about 1712, being between eighteen and twenty, fell desperately in love with Swift, then not much less than forty-five. How both the ladies, Stella and Vanessa, followed Swift to Ireland, how both suffered from the pangs of jealousy and the crooked dealing of the unworthy lover, and how fatal was the fruit of that knowledge so anxiously desired by the unhappy Vanessa,—all these and other details have been graphically sketched by Sir Walter Scott in his Life of Swift. We give a brief quotation

"Miss Vanhomrigh . . . determined on bringing to a crisis those expectations of a union with the object of her affections, to the hope of which she had clung amid every vicissitude of his conduct towards her. The most probable ban was his undefined connection with Mrs. Johnson, which, as it must have been perfectly known to her, had, doubtless, long excited her secret jealousy. . . . At length, however, Vanessa's impatience prevailed, and she ventured on the decisive step of writing to Mrs. Johnson herself, requesting to know the nature of that connection. Stella, in reply, informed her of her marriage with the Dean; and, full of the highest resentment against Swift for having given another female such a right as Miss Vanhomrigh's inquiries implied, she sent to him her rival's letter of interrogation and, without seeing him, or awaiting his reply, retired to the house of Mr. Ford, near Dublin. Every reader knows the consequence. Swift, in one of those paroxysms of fury to which he was liable, both from temper and disease, rode instantly to Marley Abbey. As he entered the apartment, the sternness of his countenance, which was peculiarly formed to express the fiercer passions, struck the unfortunate Vanessa with such terror that she could scarce ask whether he would sit down. He answered by flinging a letter on the table, and instantly leaving the house, mounted his horse, and returned to Dublin. When Vanessa opened the packet, she only found her own letter to Stella. . . . It was her death-warrant. She sunk at once under the disappointment of the delayed yet cherished hopes which had so long sickened her heart, and beneath the unrestrained wrath of him for whose sake she had indulged them. How long she survived this last interview is uncertain, but the time does not seem to have exceeded a few weeks."—Section v

(See the poem of Cadmus and Vanessa, and the Correspondence of Swift and Vanessa, in Swift's Works.)

This occurred in 1722, when the reverend Lothario had attained the mature age of fifty-four. Vanessa, who had resided in Ireland since 1714, was about twenty-nine; Stella, who had followed Swift to Ireland about 1700, and since then had made it her home, was now about forty. We return to our chronological summary of Swift's ecclesiastical, political, and literary biography. In the next year (1699) after the death of Temple he accompanied Lord Berkeley to Ireland as chaplain, acting for a time as private secretary; in the same year he received from his lordship, in place of the deanery of Derry, which he had promised him, the rectory of Agher and the vicarages of Laracor (about twenty miles from Dublin) and Rathbeggan, in the diocese of Meath; to which was added in 1700 the prebend of Dunlavin: in 1701 he published his first political tract, A Discourse on the Contests and Dissentions between the Nobles and Commons at Athens and Rome, Lon., 4to, (and this raised him to a prominent place among the leaders of the Whigs; in 1704 appeared the Tale of a Tub, (see SWIFT, THOMAS,) together with The Battle of the Books, (see BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., p. 170, supra;) in 1705 he made an unsuccessful application for the remission of the First-Fruits for Ireland; in 1708 he published The Sentiments of a Church of England Man, an attack upon astrology, (represented by Partridge, the Almanac-maker, under the name of Isaac Bickerstaff, an Argument against Abolishing Christianity, and A Letter on [in defence of] the Sacramental Test; in 1709, A Project for the Advancement of Religion, ("the only work to which he ever put his name,") a Vindication of Bickerstaff, and an explanation of an Ancient Prophecy: in 1710 he again visited England, to obtain a remission of the First-Fruits and Twentieth Parts; determined to join the Tories, and was introduced to Harley and St. John; in a short time gained the remission which he had solicited for the Irish clergy; conducted The Examiner (a weekly periodical, started by St. John, Prior, and others, in support of the new ministry) from November 10, 1710, (No. 14,) to June 14, 1711, (No. 45;); formed the Tory Society of Brothers, of which he was the most active member; published, November 27, 1711, The Conduct of the Allies, (in defence of a peace with France,) of which more than 11,000 copies were sold in two months, in 1712 issued his Proposal for Correcting, Improving, and Ascertaining the English Tongue, (a treatise of little philological value,) and his Reflections on the Barrier Treaty; February 23, 1713, was made Dean of St. Patrick's, after vain efforts for an episcopal superintendence over the colonial clergy in America, (some years previous,) and the bishopric of Hereford, in May, 1714, made his last unsuccessful effort to reconcile Lords Oxford and Bolingbroke and thus secure the stability of the Tory Government, (see his letter to Edward, Earl of Oxford, June 14, 1737;); in 1714 published The Public Spirit of the Whigs, (an answer to Sir Richard Steele's Crisis, and Free Thoughts on the Present State of Public Affairs, and received the Queen's order (rendered worthless by her Majesty's death) for £1000, returned to his deanery in 1714, and did not again visit England until 1726, in 1720 published a Proposal for the Universal Use of Irish Manufacturers, (for which the printer was prosecuted,) and in 1724 increased the popularity elicited by this tract by his famous M. B. Drapier Letters, a series of vigorous and successful protests against William Wood's patent to coin for circulation in Ireland farthings and half-pence to the amount of £108,000, (£300 was unsuccessfully offered by Lord Carteret and the Privy Council for the discovery of the author of the Fourth Letter;); in 1726 he visited England, in the same year published his Travels of Gulliver, and in March, 1727, again (for the last time) visited England, and, in conjunction with Pope, sent to the press three volumes ("the last volume" is dated 1728, but his preface bears date May 27, 1727) of their Miscellanies, (see, also, their Miscellanies, ed. 1736, 6 vols. 12mo, and POPE, ALEXANDER, supra;); in 1728-9 spent about a year with Sir Arthur Acheson, at Gosford, his seat in the North of Ireland, and about this time published a number of tracts, and wrote some light pieces of poetry, (Hamilton's Bawn, &c.); in 1735 composed, against the members of the Irish House of Commons who opposed the right of pasturage, or agistment tithe, his bitter satire of The Legion Club; in 1736 opposed by pen and tongue the prime minister's scheme for regulating the exchange with Ireland by diminishing the value of the gold coin in order to increase the quantity of silver, in 1738 permitted his Polite Conversation, a work of earlier years, to be sent to the press; in 1740 he evinced symptoms of that mental derangement which he had so long feared,—to escape which he had, for some time past, daily prayed for sudden death. "I hope I shall never see you again" was his wonted valedictory to his social evening circles. Here is a melancholy epistle to his first-cousin and faithful friend and neighbour, Mrs. Whiteway:

"I have been very miserable all night, and to-day extremely deaf and full of pain. I am so stupid and confounded that I cannot express the mortification I am under both in body and mind. All I can say is, that I am not in torture; but I daily and hourly expect it. Pray let me know how your health is, and your family. I hardly understand one word I write. I am sure my days will be very few, few and miserable they must be.

"I am, for those few days,

"Yours entirely,

"J. SWIFT.

"If I do not blunder, it is Saturday, July 26th, 1740."

"In the beginning of 1741," writes his friend, Dr. Patrick Delany, (p. 461, supra), "his understanding was so much impaired and his passions so greatly increased, that he was utterly incapable of conversation. Strangers were not permitted to approach him, and his friends found it necessary to have guardians appointed of his person and estate. Early in the year 1742 his reason was wholly subverted, and his rage became absolute madness. The last person he knew was Mrs. Whiteway; and the sight of her, when he knew her no longer, threw him into fits of rage so violent and dreadful that she was forced to leave him. . . . In October, 1742, after this frenzy had continued several months, his left eye swelled to the size of an egg; . . .

during one week it was with difficulty that five persons kept him by mere force from tearing out his eyes."

He had a short return of reason, succeeded by total insensibility. We resume Delany's narration:

"After the Dean had continued silent a whole year in this helpless state of idiocy, his housekeeper went into his room on the 30th of November, [1743,] in the morning, telling him that it was his birthday, and that bonfires and illuminations were preparing to celebrate it as usual. to this he immediately replied, 'It is all folly they had better let it alone.'

He sometimes celebrated his birthday himself after a very different fashion:

"I hope things will be better on Thursday, [his birthday,] else I shall be full of the spleen, because it is a day you seem to regard, although I detest it, and I read the third chapter of Job that morning"—Swift to Mrs. Whiteway, Nov. 27, 1738.

We return to the closing scene:

"In the course of about three years," says Scott, "he is only known to have spoken once or twice. At length, when this awful moral lesson had subsisted from 1743 until the 19th of October, 1745, it pleased God to release the subject of these Memoirs from this calamitous situation. He died upon that day, without a single pang, so gently, indeed, that his attendants were scarce aware of the moment of his dissolution.

"It was then that the gratitude of the Irish showed itself in the full glow of national enthusiasm. The interval was forgotten during which their great patriot had been dead to the world, and he was wept and mourned as if he had been called away in the full career of his public services. Young and old of all ranks surrounded the house, to pay the last tribute of sorrow and of affection. Locks of his hair were so eagerly sought after that Mr. Sheridan happily applies to the enthusiasm of the citizens of Dublin the lines of Shakespeare:

"Yea, beg a hair of him in memory,
And diving mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
Unto their issue."

Scott's Life of Swift

In concluding this sad story, it may be thought proper for us to join with those who, pointing the finger of admonition at the cage of the wretched maniac, exclaim, "Behold an awful monument of the retributive justice of Almighty God!" But we have no heart for such censorship: we have not so "learned Christ." Remembering that those "whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices," and that the eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, were not proved by their greater calamities to be greater sinners than "all men that dwell in Jerusalem," we presume not to "deal God's judgments round the world on all we deem his foes;" and we hesitate to pronounce nonconformity with ourselves enmity against God.

We concur with those biographers of Swift who condemn many points of his character; but we are by no means sure that either of these, if placed in like circumstances and likewise constituted, would have behaved any better.

His treatment of the three women whose names will be forever associated with his own has been greatly, perhaps justly, censured; but can nothing be said, and honestly said, in his defence?

Varina:—he certainly discouraged her late repentance; but is every postponed suitor obliged to kindle into fresh raptures whensoever it pleases the lady to change her mind?

Stella:—he was unwilling to live in matrimonial relations with her. May not the "fearful looking for" of madness which terrified his later years have long before held him in bondage, and thus constituted that a virtue which has been adjudged a crime? What meant Swift when, then apparently in the prime of his powers, he remarked of Lord Allen, "I know that he is a madman, and, if that were all, no man living could commiserate his condition more than myself"? More than twenty years before his death, he exclaimed prophetically to Dr. Young, "I shall be like that tree: I shall die at the top."

What was the mystery referred to in the following sad chapter of a bridegroom's history?

"[Immediately subsequent to the ceremony [the private marriage of Swift and Stella] Swift's state of mind appears to have been dreadful. Delany, (as I have learned from a friend of his relation,) being pressed to give his opinion on this strange union, said that, about the time it took place, he observed Swift to be extremely gloomy and agitated; so much so that he went to Archbishop King to mention his apprehensions. On entering the library, Swift rushed out with a countenance of distraction, and passed him without speaking. He found the archbishop in tears, and upon asking the reason he said, 'You have just met the most unhappy man on earth, but on the subject of his wretchedness you must never ask a question.' Swift secluded himself from society for some days. When he reappeared, his intercourse with Stella and Mrs. Dingley [the lady with whom Stella resided] was resumed, with the same guarded and cautious attention to prevent the slightest suspicion of a more intimate union with the former; as if such intimacy had not now been legal and virtuous. Stella, therefore, continued the beloved and intimate friend of Swift, the regulator of his household on public days, although she only appeared there as an ordinary guest; the companion of his social hours, and his comforter in sickness; but his wife only in name, and even that nominal union a secret from the world."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Swift, sect. v.

We do not dwell upon Delany's supposition that Swift's unhappiness arose from his knowledge that Stella and himself were, by different mothers, the children of Sir William Temple, because we concur with Scott in deeming this hypothesis untenable.

Vanessa.—it was undoubtedly very wrong for Swift to frequent her society after a declaration of love which he could not honestly encourage; but the temptation was great. Swift was but a man,—a courted, petted, spoiled man,—delighted by and delighting in the exercise of social fascinations of no common order; and it is surely something in his favour that (rather late in the day, perhaps) he so strenuously and sincerely strove to discourage that "inexpressible passion for him which Vanessa declared it was not in the power of time or accident to lessen;" "though," complains she, "you endeavour by severities to force me from you." How many of Swift's censors would have visited the fair Vanessa with the "severities" which they lavish on the Dean? Let us temper judgment with mercy, and we think that "the quality of" our "mercy is not strained." Committing these suggestions—for they are not offered as vindications—to the consideration of the candid reader, we proceed to adduce the opinions of a number of eminent authorities on

SWIFT'S CHARACTER AS A MAN.

Let us first cite the testimony of his friend of many years, (surely our intimates know us, if any do,) Dr. Delany, Prebendary of St. Patrick's, (p. 491, supra.)

"My lord," he writes to Lord Orrery, "when you consider Swift's singular, peculiar, and most variegated vein of wit, always rightly intended, (although not always so rightly directed,) delightful in many instances, and salutary even where it is most offensive, when you consider his strict truth, his fortitude in resisting oppression and arbitrary power; his fidelity in friendship; his sincere love and zeal for religion; his uprightness in making right resolutions, and his steadiness in adhering to them, . . . his invincible patriotism, even to a country which he did not love; his very various, well-devised, well-judged, and extensive charities throughout his life, and his whole fortune (to say nothing of his wife's) conveyed to the same Christian purposes [a hospital in Dublin for lunatics and idiots endowment £10,000] at his death, charities from which he could enjoy no honour, advantage, or satisfaction of any kind in this world, when you consider his ironical and humorous, as well as his serious, schemes for the promotion of true religion and virtue; his success in soliciting for the First-Fruits and Twentieths, to the unspeakable benefit of the Established Church of Ireland; and his felicity (to rate it no higher) in giving occasion to the building of fifty new churches in London all this considered, the character of his life will appear like that of his writings; they will both bear to be reconsidered and re-examined with the utmost attention, and always discover new lucidities and excellences upon every examination.

"They will bear to be considered as the sun, in which the brightness will hide the blemishes; and whenever petulant ignorance, pride, malignity, or envy interposes to cloud or sully his fame, I will take upon me to pronounce that the eclipse will not last long.

"To conclude. No man ever deserved better of his country than Swift did of his. A steady, persevering, inflexible friend, a wise, watchful, and a faithful counsellor, under many severe trials and bitter persecutions, to the manifest hazard both of his liberty and fortune.

"He lived a blessing, he died a benefactor, and his name will ever live an honour, to Ireland."—Observations on Lord Orrery's [see BOSTON, JOHN, p. 231, (supra), new ed., 1831, 12mo.] Remarks on the Life and Writings of Dr. Jonathan Swift, by P. Delany, 1764, 8vo, 291.

"He was a churchman rationally zealous; he desired the prosperity and maintained the honour of the clergy; of the dissenters he did not wish to infringe the toleration, but he opposed their encroachments. To his duty as dean he was very attentive. . . . In his church he restored the practice of weekly communion, and distributed the sacramental elements in the most solemn and devout manner with his own hand. He came to church every morning, preached commonly in his turn, and attended the evening anthem, that it might not be negligently performed. . . . The suspicions of his irreligion proceeded in a great measure from his dread of hypocrisy; instead of wishing to seem better, he delighted in seeming worse, than he was. He went in London to early prayers, lest he should be seen at church; he read prayers to his servants every morning with such dexterous secrecy, that Dr. Delany was six months in his house before he knew it. He was not only careful to hide the good which he did, but willingly incurred the suspicion of evil which he did not. He forgot what himself had formerly asserted, that hypocrisy is less mischievous than open impiety. Dr. Delany, with all his zeal for his honour, has justly condemned this part of his character."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Swift, in his Lives of the English Poets.

"Swift was in person tall, strong, and well made, of a dark complexion, but with blue eyes, ["they are quite asure as the heavens, and there's a very uncommon archness in them."—Pope, in Spence, 168;] black and bushy eyebrows, nose somewhat aquiline, and features which well expressed the stern, haughty, and dauntless turn of his mind. He was never known to laugh, and his smiles are happily characterised by the well-known lines of Shakespeare. Indeed, the whole description of Cassius might be applied to Swift. . . . His manners were, in his better days, free, lively, and engaging, not devoid of peculiarities, but blending them so well to circumstances that his company was universally courted. . . . He often exhibited in his first address a sternness and bluntness of demeanour which, detached from the mode in which he well knew how to repair the pain he had given, was harsh to his inferiors and uncivil to those of higher rank. An anecdote which, though told by Mrs. Pilkington, is well attested, bears, that the last time he was in London he went to dine with the Earl of Burlington, who was then but newly married. The earl, being willing, it is supposed, to have some diversion, did not introduce him to his lady, nor mention his name. After dinner, said the Dean, 'Lady Burlington, I hear you can sing; sing me a song.' The lady looked on this unceremonious manner of asking a favour with distaste, and positively refused. He said 'She should sing, or he would make her. Why, madam, I suppose you take me for one of your poor English hedge-parsons. Sing when I bid you.' As the earl did nothing but laugh at this freedom, the lady was so vexed that she burst into tears, and retired. His first compliment to her, when he saw her again, was, 'Pray, madam, are you as proud and as ill-natured now as when I saw you last?' To which she answered, with great humour, 'No, Mr. Dean; I'll sing for you, if you please.' From which time he conceived great esteem for her."—Scott's Life of Swift, Conclusion.

Another anecdote illustrative of the Dean's peculiarities, told by no less a man than his friend Pope, is too good to be omitted:

"Dr. Swift has an odd blunt way that is mistaken by strangers for ill nature. 'Tis so bad that there's no describing it but by facts. I'll tell you one that just comes into my head. One evening Gay and I went to see him; you know how intimately we were all acquainted. On our coming in, 'Hey-day, gentlemen,' says the Doctor, 'what's the meaning of this visit? How came you to leave all the great lords that you are so fond of, to come hither to see a poor Deau?' 'Because we would rather see you than any of them.' 'Ay, any one that did not know you as well as I do, might believe you. But, since you are come, I must get some supper for you, I suppose?' 'No, Doctor, we have supped already.' 'Supped already?' that's impossible. Why, 'tis not eight o'clock yet?' 'Indeed we have.' 'That's very strange, but if you had not supped, I must have got something for you. Let me see what should I have had?' a couple of lobsters? 'Ay, that would have done very well, two shillings' tarts, a shilling. But you will drink a glass of wine with me, though you supped so much before your usual time, only to spare my pocket?' 'No, we had rather talk with you than drink with you.' 'But if you had supped with me, as in all reason you ought to have done, you must have drank with me. A bottle of wine, two shillings. Two and two is four, and one is five. Just two and sixpence apiece. There, Pope, there's half a crown for you, and there's another for you, sir, for I won't save any thing by you. I am determined.' This was all said and done with his usual seriousness on such occasions, and, in spite of every thing we could say to the contrary, he actually obliged us to take the money."—Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, 19.

"Swift, whose muse seems to have been mere misanthropy, he was a cynic rather than a poet; and his natural dryness and sarcastic severity would have been unpleasing had he not qualified them by adopting the extravagant humour of Lucian and Rabelais."—SMOLLETT: Hist. of Eng. & George I., Notes.

"Swift was a wild beast, who worried and baited all mankind almost, because his intolerable arrogance, vanity, pride, and ambition were disappointed."—Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, Jan. 13, 1780. Lit. Rev., ed. 1861, ii. 311.

"The apostate politician, the ribald priest, the perjured lover, —a heart burning with hatred against the whole human race,—a mind richly stored with images from the dung-hill and the leazar-house."—LORD MACAULAY: Edm. Rev., lvi. 538.

"His first connections were with the Whigs, who seem to have treated him with a slight, which, with a consciousness of his extraordinary powers, he very justly resented. He unfortunately suffered himself to be betrayed by his just resentment into a coalition with their opponents, without sufficiently considering that to retain right principles in mere abstraction was no atonement for co-operation with their enemies. But it must not be forgotten that in this unhappy change he broke no confidence; that he long resisted the tendency of political separation to dissolve friendship, and that when he at last yielded, instead of persecuting old friends, as so often happens, he used all his influence to serve them."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, ii. ch. iii.

"It is of itself a tolerably decisive fact, that this change took place just when the Whig ministry went out of power and their adversaries came into full possession of all the patronage and interest of the government. The whole matter, however, is fairly spoken out in various parts of his own writings, and we do not believe there is anywhere on record a more barefaced avowal of political apostasy, undisguised and unparalled by the slightest colour or pretence of public or conscientious motives."—LORD JEFFREY: Scott's Edition of Swift, Edm. Rev., Sept. 1816; reprinted in Jeffrey's Essays, and in Longman's Trav. Lib. (Swift and Richardson, by Lord Jeffrey), Dec. 1852, or 8vo.

His lordship's estimate of Swift's public and private character is most unfavourable: it must be carefully perused after a dispassionate examination of the very different judgments of Scott and Mackintosh.

This notice of Scott's edition of Swift naturally introduces a list of EDITIONS OF SWIFT'S WORKS.

Faulkner's edition of Swift's Works, Dublin, 20 vols. 8vo, (5 copies on thick paper, 1 p., r. 8vo.) and the edition by Hawkesworth, &c., London, 1755-68, though both valuable as curiosities, are not to be purchased as Complete Editions of Swift. The only ones which can (and not all these, strictly speaking, can) claim this title are the following:

I. London, 25 vols. 8vo, (same in 27 vols. or. 8vo, also called 12mo, and in 27 vols. 18mo.) i.-xii., by Dr. Hawkesworth, 1755; xiii., xiv., by William Bowyer, assisted by John Nichols, 1762, xv., xvi., by Deane Swift, 1765, xvii., by John Nichols, with General Index to vols. i.-xvii. and xviii.-xxiii., 1775; xviii., xix., xx., Epistolary Correspondence, by Dr. Hawkesworth, 1766; xxi., xxii., xxiii., Epistolary Correspondence, by Dean Swift, 1767, xxiv., called Supplement, by John Nichols, 1776; xxv., called Supplement, by John Nichols, 1779. See Nichols's Illustr. of Lit., v. 391, 8vo, ix.; Lon. Month. Rev., 1776, ii. 162-3, 1779, ii. 356. We have given the dates of the first editions of the volumes; there were new impressions from time to time in London, Dublin, and Edinburgh.

II. London, Arranged, Revised, and Corrected by Thomas Sheridan, A.M., 17 vols. 8vo, 1 p., r. 8vo. See Nichols's Illustr. of Lit., v. 394, viii. 12, 42.

III. London, Corrected and Revised by John Nichols, 1801, 19 vols. 8vo, 1 p., r. 8vo; again, 1803, (some 1804,) 24 vols. 18mo, again, 1808, 19 vols. 8vo, N. York, 1812-13, 24 vols. 12mo. See Nichols's Illustr. of Lit., v. 396, Nichols, John, No. 12.

IV. Edinburgh, Containing additional Letters, Tracts, and Poems, not hitherto published, with Notes, and a Life of the Author, by Sir Walter Scott, 1814, (some 1815,) 1250 copies, 19 vols. 8vo, 1 p., r. 8vo. 2d ed., 1824, 1250 copies, 19 vols. 8vo. Contents Vol. i, Memoirs, by Scott, (repub. Paris, 1820, 2 vols. 12mo, and in Scott's Prose Works) Vol. ii, Journal to Stella, Letters i to 42. Vol. iii, Journal to Stella, Letters 43 to 65, Memoirs relating to the Change in the Ministry in 1710. Contests and Dissentions in Athens and Rome, The Examiner, Nos. 13 to 45. Vol. iv, Character of the Earl of Wharton. Remarks on a Letter to the Seven Lords appointed to examine Greig, New Journey to Paris, Advice to the October Club, Reasons to prove that no one is obliged, as a Whig, to oppose the Queen; Pretended Letter of Thanks from Lord Wharton to the Bishop of St. Asaph, in the name of the Kiteat Club, Refutation of the Falsehoods alleged against Erasmus Lewis; Preface to the Bishop of Sarum's Introduction to the Third Volume of the History of the Reformation of the Church of England. Importance of the Guardian; The Public Spirit of the Whigs, Letter from Dr. Tripe to Nestor Ironside, The Conduct of the Allies; Remarks on the Barrier Treaty between Queen Anne and the States-General, Appendix to The Conduct of the Allies. Vol. v, History of the Four Last Years of the Queen, (originally entitled The History of the Peace of Utrecht, written in 1714, intended by Swift to have appeared in 1737, but first pub. 1757,—some 1758,—8vo.) V. London, Containing interesting and valuable papers not hitherto published, with a Memoir of the Author, by Thomas Roscoe, 1841, 2 vols. demy 8vo, also 1848, 1851, 1853, 1856, 1868, each in 2 vols. demy 8vo, N. York, ("first complete American edition,") 1859, 6 vols. 12mo, again, Dec 1862, 6 vols. 12mo. A new edition of Swift's Works, prefaced by a Life, Journals, and Letters, has been for some time promised by Mr. John Murray, of London.

We also notice his Select Works, illustrated by Stothard, Lon., 1825, 5 vols. sm. 12mo; his Choice Works, with Life by Rev. John Mitford, and Notes by W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D., N. York, 1857, 2 vols. 12mo, his Works, Carefully Selected, with Life of the Author, and Original and Authentic Notes, by D. Laing Purves, Edin., 1868, r. demy 8vo, (Nimmo's Stand. Lib.) his Poems, with Life by Rev. John Mitford, Lon., 1833, 3 vols. 12mo, (Ald Poets, xxvii., xxviii., xxix.) and same, Bost., 1854, also 1859, 3 vols. 16mo, (L. B. & Co's Brit. Poets.) N. York, 12mo; Swift and Prior's Poems, Oxf., 1853, 12mo.

Of Gulliver's Travels (of which the first edition, 1726, 4 Parts, in 2 vols. 8vo, contains some anecdotes omitted in later editions) a modern French version, with over 400 wood-cuts, after designs by Grandville, Paris, 1838, 2 vols. 8vo, is highly esteemed by collectors. In English, with Life of Swift, Notes, and Essay on Satirical Fiction, by W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D., and designs after Grandville, Lon., 1841, r. 8vo, (H. G. Bohn.) another illustrated ed., 1840, r. 8vo, (Hayward,) "for the first time presented in an entirely unexceptionable form," with plates by Browne, new ed., Dec 1847, 18mo, (Burn's Cab. Series.) There is also an impression with a Sketch of the Life of Swift, Edin., 1858, 12mo; and another ed., with "a faithful French translation, for the use of beginners in French," by Dr. Pircher, Lon., 1859, 12mo. Gulliver's Travels Edin., 1824, 8vo, N. York, 8vo, Lon., 24mo, and 1864, 8vo, (Illustrations to, by J. G. Thomson, 1864, 8vo.) 1867, 18mo, 1868, p. 8vo; with Explan. Notes and a Life of the Author, by J. F. Waller, LL.D., and Illustrations by T. Morten, 1865, c. 4to; re-issue, 1870. Hints to Servants: a Poetical and Modernized Version of Dean Swift's Celebrated Directions, &c., by an Upper Servant, with 12 Original Designs by Kenny Meadows, 1843, fp. 8vo. Tale of a Tub, new ed., 1867, 18mo.

SWIFT'S CHARACTER AS AN AUTHOR.

"In his works he has given very different specimens both of sentiments and expressions. His 'Tale of a Tub' has little resemblance to his other pieces. It exhibits a vehemence and rapidity of mind, a copiousness of images, and vivacity of diction, such as he afterwards never possessed or never exerted. It is of a mode so distinct and peculiar that it must be considered by itself; what is true of that, is not true of any thing else which he has written. . . . 'What a genius I had when I wrote that book!'—Swift, in old age." In his other works is found an equable tenor of easy language, which rather trickles than flows. His delight was in simplicity. That he has in his works no metaphor, as has been said, is not true, but his few metaphors seem to be received rather by necessity than choice . . . His style was well suited to his thoughts, which are never subtilised by nice disquisitions, decorated by sparkling conceits, elevated by ambitious sentences, or variegated by far-sought learning. . . . In the poetical works of Dr. Swift there is not much upon which the critic can exercise his powers. They are often humorous, almost always light, and have the qualities which recommend such compositions,—easiness and gaiety. They are, for the most part, what their author intended. The diction is correct, the numbers are smooth, and the rhymes exact. There seldom occurs a hard-laboured expression, or a redundant epithet; all his verses exemplify his own definition of a good style—they consist of "proper words in proper places."—Dr. Johnson Life of Swift, in Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives of the English Poets, 1854, iii. 190, 191, 199. q v (Index) for the editor's illustrative Notes. See, also, Croker's Boswell's Johnson, Index.

"As an AUTHOR there are three peculiarities remarkable in the character of Swift. The first of these has been rarely conceded to an author, at least by his contemporaries. It is the distinguished attribute of ORIGINALITY, and it cannot be refused to Swift by the most severe critic. Even Johnson has allowed that perhaps no author can be found who has borrowed so little, or has so well maintained his claim to be considered as original. There was indeed nothing written before his time which could serve for his model, and the few hints which he has adopted from other authors bear no more resemblance to his compositions than the green wax to the cable which is formed from it. . . . The second peculiarity, which has indeed been already noticed, is his total indifference to literary fame. Swift executed his various and numerous works as a carpenter forms wedges, mallets, or other implements of his art, not with the purpose of distinguishing himself by the workmanship bestowed on the tools themselves, but solely in order to render them fit for accomplishing a certain purpose, beyond which they were of no value in his eyes. . . . The careless mode in which Swift suffered his works to get to the public, his refusing them the credit of his name, and his renouncing all connection with the profits of literature, indicate his disdain of the character of a professional author.

"The third distinguishing mark of Swift's literary character is, that, with the exception of history, (for his fugitive attempts in Pindaric and Latin verse are too unimportant to be noticed,) he has never attempted any style of composition in which he has not obtained a distinguished pitch of excellence. . . . We have endeavored elsewhere [vol. xi of his ed. of Swift's Works] to make some remarks on those celebrated Travels, [of Gulliver.] Perhaps no work ever exhibited such general attractions to all classes. It offered personal and political satire to the readers in high life, low and coarse incident to the vulgar, marvels to the romantic, wit to the young and lively, lessons of morality and policy to the grave, and maxims of deep and bitter misanthropy to neglected age and disappointed ambition. The plan of the satire varies in the different parts."—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Life of Swift, sect. vi., and Conclusion.

"That part of Dean Swift's satire [Gulliver's Travels] which relates to the Struldbrugs may possibly occur to some readers as bearing upon this topic. That the staunch admirers of that singularly-gifted person should have been flung into ecstasies on the perusal of this extraordinary part of his writings, need not surprise us. Their raptures were full easily excited, but I am quite clear they have given a wrong gloss to it, and heaped upon its merits a very undeserved praise. They think that the picture of the Struldbrugs was intended to wean us from a love of life, and that it has well accomplished its purpose. I am very certain that the dean never had any such thing in view, because his sagacity was far too great not to perceive that he only could make out this position by a most undignified begging of the question. How could any man of the most ordinary reflection expect to wean his fellow-creatures from love of life by describing a sort of persons who at a given age lost their faculties and became doting, drivelling idiots? Did any man breathing ever pretend that he wished to live, not only for centuries, but even for threescore years and ten, bereaved of his understanding, and treated by the law and by his fellow-men as in hopeless incurable dotage? The passage in question is much more likely to have proceeded from Swift's exaggerated misanthropy, and to have been designed as an antidote to human pride, by showing that our duration is necessarily limited,—it, indeed, it is not rather to be regarded as the work of mere whim and caprice."—LORD BROUGHAM. A Discourse of Natural Theology, sect. v., last note.

"Now it came to pass that, about this time, the renowned Wouter Van Twiller, full of years and honours and counsellors, had reached that period of life and faculty which, according to the great Gulliver, entitles a man to admission into the ancient order of Struldbrugs."—WASHINGTON IRVING: Knicknack.

"Perhaps the most melancholy satire in the whole of that dreadful book is the description of the very old people in the voyage to Laputa. At Lugnas Gulliver hears of some persons who never die, called the Struldbrugs, and, expressing a wish to become acquainted with men who have so much learning and experience, his colloquy describes the Struldbrugs to him."—THACKERAY. English Humourists. Swift.

"The Voyages of Captain Lemuel Gulliver is indisputably his greatest work. The idea of making fictitious travel the vehicle of satire as well as of amusement, is at least as old as Lucian, but has never been carried into execution with such success, spirit, and originality as in this celebrated performance. . . . Of his poetry we do not think there is much to be said; for we cannot persuade ourselves that Swift was in any respect a poet. . . . Of his style it has been usual to speak with great and, we think, exaggerated praise. It is less mellow than Dryden's—less elegant than Pope's or Addison's—less free and noble than Lord Dunsin's—and utterly without the glow and loftiness which belonged to our earlier masters. It is radically a low and homely style—without grace and without affectation; and chiefly remarkable for a great choice and profusion of common words and expressions. . . . In humour and in irony, and in the talent of deflating and deflating what he hated, we join with the world in thinking the Dean of St. Patrick's without a rival."—LORD JEFFREY. Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816, 46, 49, 56, 57, et ubi supra.

"By the judicious advice of Mr. Mallet, I was directed to the writings of Swift and Addison: wit and simplicity are their common attributes; but the style of Swift is supported by manly vigour, that of Addison is adorned by the female graces of elegance and mildness."—GIBSON. Memoirs of my Life and Writings, ed. 1837, 65.

"But I know your affection for wherever proceeds from your partiality to Dean Swift, whom I can often laugh with, whose style I can even approve, but surely can never admire. It has no harmony, no eloquence, no ornament, and not much correctness, whatever the English may imagine. Were not their literature still in a somewhat barbarous state, that author's place would not be so high among their classics."—Hume to Robertson: *Dugald Stewart's Account, &c. of Dr. W. "The Tale of a Tub is, in my apprehension, the master-piece of Swift; certainly Rabelais has nothing superior, even in invention, nor any thing so condensed, so pointed, so full of real meaning, of biting satire, of felicitous analogy. The Battle of the Books is such an improvement of the similar combat in the Lutrin, that we can hardly own it as an imitation."—HALLAM. Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 578.

"M. Swift est Rabelais dans son bon sens et vivant en bonne compagnie. Il n'a pas, à la vérité, le génie du premier, mais il a toute la finesse, la raison, le choix, le bon goût qui manquent à notre curé de Meudon. Ses vers sont d'un goût singulier, et presque inimitable; la bonne plaisanterie est son partage en vers et en prose, mais pour le bien entendre, il faut faire un petit voyage dans son pays."—VOLTAIRE. Lettres sur les Anglais, Lett. 22.

"Jonathan Swift has been most inappropriately called by Voltaire the English Rabelais. Voltaire relished only the impurities of Rabelais, and his humour, when it is good, but the deep satire on society and man, the lofty philosophy, the grand style, of the curé of Meudon, escaped his notice, as he saw only the weak side of Christianity, and had no idea of the intellectual and moral revolution effected in mankind by the gospel. . . . The ages in which the two writers lived produce, moreover, a wide difference between them. Rabelais began his language, Swift finished his."—CHATEAUBRIAND. Sketch of Eng. Lit., 1837, ii. 245, 246.

Coleridge says it was "the soul of Rabelais dwelling in a dry place."

"Perhaps the best way of describing Addison's peculiar pleasantness is to compare it with the pleasantness of some other great satirists. The three most eminent masters of the art of ridicule during the eighteenth century were, we conceive, Addison, Swift, and Voltaire. Which of the three had the greatest power of moving laughter may be questioned. But each of them, within his own domain, was supreme. Voltaire is the prince of buffoons. His merriment is without disguise or restraint. He gambols, he grins, he shakes his sides, he points the finger; he turns up the nose, he shoots out the tongue. The manner of Swift is the very opposite to this. He moves laughter, but never joins in it. He appears in his works such as he appeared in society. All the company are convulsed with merriment, while the Dean, the author of all the mirth, preserves an invincible gravity, and even sourness, of aspect, and gives utterance to the most eccentric and ludicrous fancies with the air of a man reading the commination service."

"The manner of Addison is as remote from that of Swift as from that of Voltaire. He neither laughs out, like the French wit, nor, like the Irish wit, throws a double portion of severity into his countenance while laughing inwardly, but preserves a look peculiarly his own, a look of demure serenity, disturbed only by an arch sparkle of the eye, an almost imperceptible elevation of the brow, an almost imperceptible curl of the lip. His tone is never either that of a Jack-Pudding or of a Cynic. It is that of a gentleman, in whom the quickest sense of the ridiculous is constantly tempered by good nature and good breeding."

"We own that the humour of Addison is, in our opinion, of a more delicious flavour than the humour of either Swift or Voltaire. Thus much, at least, is certain, that both Swift and Voltaire have been successfully mimicked, and that no man has yet been able to mimic Addison. The letter of the Abbé Coyer to Panopie is Voltaire all over, and imposed, during a long time, on the Académiciens of Paris. There are passages in Arbuthnot's satirical works which we, at least, cannot distinguish from Swift's best writing. But of the many eminent men who have made Addison their model, though several have copied his mere diction with happy effect, none has been able to catch the tone of his pleasantness."

"In the World, in the Connoisseur, in the Mirror, in the Lounger, there are numerous papers written in obvious imitation of his Letters and Spectators. Most of these papers have some merit; many are very lively and amusing, but there is not a single one which could be passed off as Addison's on a critic of the smallest perspicacity."

"But that which chiefly distinguishes Addison from Swift, from Voltaire, from almost all the other great masters of ridicule, is the grace, the nobleness, the moral purity, which we find even in his merriment. Severity, gradually hardening and darkening into misanthropy, characterizes the works of Swift. The nature of Voltaire was, indeed, not inhuman, but he venerated nothing. Neither in the master-pieces of art nor in the purest examples of virtue, neither in the Great First Cause nor in the awful enigma of the grave, could he see any thing but subjects for drollery. The more solemn and august the theme, the more monkey-like was his grimacing and chattering. The mirth of Swift is the mirth of Mephistopheles, the mirth of Voltaire is the mirth of Puck. If, as Soame Jenyns oddly imagined, a portion of the happiness of seraphim and just men made perfect be derived from an exquisite perception of the ludicrous, their mirth must surely be no other than the mirth of Addison,—a mirth consistent with tender compassion for all that is frail and with profound reverence for all that is sublime. Nothing great, nothing amiable, no moral duty, no doctrine of natural or revealed religion, has ever been associated by Addison with any degrading idea. His humanity is without parallel in literary history. The highest proof of virtue is to possess boundless power without abusing it. No kind of power is more formidable than the power of making men ridiculous, and that power Addison possessed in boundless measure. How grossly that power was abused by Swift and by Voltaire is well known. But of Addison it may be confidently affirmed that he has blackened no man's character,—nay, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find, in all the volumes which he has left us, a single taunt which can be called ungenerous or unkind. Yet he had detractors whose malignity might have seemed to justify as terrible a revenge as that which men not superior to him in genius wreaked on Bettesworth and on Franc de Pompignan. He was a politician, he was the best writer of his party, he lived in times of fierce excitement, in times when persons of high character and station stooped to scurrility such as is now practiced only by the basest of mankind. Yet no provocation and no example could induce him to return railing for railing."—LORD MACAULAY, Life and Writings of Addison, Edin. Rev., July, 1843, repub. in his Essays, and in his Works, Lon., 1866, vii 90

"His style is, in its kind, one of the models of English composition; it is proper, pure, precise, perspicuous, significant, nervous, deriving a certain dignity from a masterly contempt of puerile ornaments, in which every word seems to convey the intended meaning with the decision of the writer's character; not adapted, indeed, to express nice distinctions of thought or shades of feeling, or to convey those new and large ideas which must be illustrated by imagery, but qualified beyond any other to discuss the common business of life in such a manner as to convince and persuade the generality of men, and, where occasion allows it, meriting in its vehement plainness the praise of the most genuine eloquence. His verse is only, apparently, distinguished by the accident of measure, it has no quality of poetry, and, like his prose, is remarkable for sense and wit."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Lect., ii ch. iii. See, also, chaps. i, ii, and vii, and POPE, ALEXANDER, p. 1636, supra, (quotation from Sir J. Mackintosh)

"Dean Swift may be placed at the head of those that have employed the plain style. Few writers have discovered more capacity. He treats every subject which he handles, whether serious or ludicrous, in a masterly manner. He knew, almost beyond any man, the purity, the extent, the precision, of the English language, and, therefore, to such as wish to attain a pure and correct style, he is one of the most useful models. But we must not look for much ornament and grace in his language."—*DR HUGH BLAIR, Lects. on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XXVIII. See, also, Lects. "There is just published Swift's History, [of the Four Last Years of Queen Anne.] Pope and Lord Bolingbroke always told him it would disgrace him, and persuaded him to burn it. Disgrace him indeed it does,—being a weak libel, ill written for style, uninformed, and adopting the most errant mob stories. He makes the Duke of Marlborough a coward, Prince Eugene an assassin, my father remarkable for nothing but impudence, and would make my Lord Somers any thing but the most amiable character in the world, if unfortunately he did not praise him while he tries to abuse."—HORACE WALPOLE to Sir Horace Mann, March 21, 1758. Letters. See, also, Feb. 10, 1768

"Swift's reputation as a poet has been in a manner obscured by the greatest splendour, by the natural force and inventive genius, of his prose writings, but, if he had never written either the Tale of a Tub or Gulliver's Travels, his name merely as a poet would have come down to us, and have gone down to posterity, with well-earned honours. His imitations of Horace, and still more his verses on his own Death, [probably written about 1730 or 1731; published 1732, fol.] place him in the first rank of agreeable moralists in verse. Swift shone as one of the most sensible of the poets, he is also distinguished as one of the most nonsensical of them."—HAZLITT, Lects. on the English Poets, Lect. VI

"Cousin Swift, you will never be a poet," was the great Dryden's candid verdict on returning to him his Pindaric Odes,—compositions of his earlier years. Of his sermons it has been remarked,

"One will see the original force of the Dean's genius more in these compositions, that were the legitimate sons of duty, than in other poems, that were the natural sons of love."—EARL OF GREY.

His lordship's illustration is not elegant: as regards his canon, it only needs to be exactly reversed to be nearer the truth. Addison called Swift "the most agreeable companion, the truest friend, and the greatest genius of his age," (Scott's Swift, sect. ii.) Pope ranks him as a "great master of humour," (Spence's Anecdotes, 334; Thackeray calls him "the greatest wit of all times," (Lects. on the English Humourists, Lect. IV.) and Lord Macaulay characterizes him as "the ablest man of the Tory party," and "the keenest of all observers of life and manners," (Hist. of Eng., i. ch. iii; iv. ch. xx.) See, also, Lord Macaulay's comparison between the styles of Dr. Johnson's and Swift's political tracts, in his review of the Life and Writings of Sir William Temple, in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838; repub. in his Essays; of which see, also, Index—see, also, SMITH, SYDNEY, p. 2157, supra, (quotation from Lord Macaulay.)

"At Court the Doctor had no eyes but for the very greatest. Lord Treasurer and Sir John used to call him Jonathan, and they paid him with this cheap coin for the service they took of him. He writ their lampoons, fought their enemies, flogged and bullied in their service, and, it must be owned, with a consummate skill and ferocity. 'He said he hath lost his intellect now, and forgotten his wrongs and his rage against mankind. I have always thought of him and of Marlborough as the two greatest men of that age. I have read his books (who doth not know them?) here in our calm woods, and imagine a giant to myself as I think of him,—a lonely fallen Prometheus, groaning as the vulture tears him. Prometheus I saw, but, when first I ever had any words with him, the giant stepped out of a sedan-chair in the Poultry, whither he had come with a tipsy Irish servant parading before him, who announced him,—bawling out his Reverence's name whilst his master below was as yet haggling with his chairmen. I dislike this Mr. Swift. . . If the greatest satirist the world ever hath seen had writ against Harley, and not for him, what a history had he left behind of the last years of Queen Anne's reign! But Swift, that scorned all mankind, and himself not the least of all, had this merit of a faithful partisan, that he loved those chiefs who treated him well, and stuck by Harley bravely in his fall, as he gallantly had supported him in his better fortune.'"—THACKERAY, Edmond, book iii ch. v, x

See TAYLOR, THOMAS, "The Platonist," No. 20. Dr. Parr "ranked Sydenham first amongst the Platonic scholars." Mr. Taylor considers that early prejudices and the res angusta domi "rendered Sydenham incapable of appreciating Plato's more sublime sentiments. His translation, however, of other parts," he continues, "which are not so abstruse, is excellent. In these he not only presents his reader faithfully with the matter, but likewise with the genuine manner, of Plato." See Taylor's Miscellanies, (TAYLOR, THOMAS, "The Platonist," No. 22.)

Sydenham, Thomas, "the most illustrious of English physicians," also styled "The English Celsus," and "The English Hippocrates," was b. at Winford Eagle, Dorsetshire, 1624; admitted as a commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, 1642; took the degree of Bachelor of Physic, 1648, and about the same time became a Fellow of All Souls' College, received the degree of M.D. at Cambridge, and subsequently settled in London, where he practised with great success, (notwithstanding the hostility of the College of Physicians,) being "the chief physician from 1660 to 1670, . . . when he was laid up with the terrible disease of the gout." After suffering from this complaint and from stone in the kidneys for many years, he d. Dec. 29, 1689, and was buried in the aisle of St. James's Church, Westminster.

"It is worth while, in the case of a man who acquired such high eminence as Sydenham, to inquire what were the causes to which he owed his great celebrity. He was not a learned man, and his works, written by him originally in English, were translated into Latin, before publication, by his friends Dr. Mapletott and Mr. Havers. He constructed no brilliant theory, and indeed was always consistent in following that which he adopted. . . . Sydenham's method of treating smallpox, though so great an improvement of the practice which then prevailed, was in opposition to the theory which he had embraced. . . . This it is which constitutes his merit, that, in an age of brilliant theories, he applied himself to questioning Nature herself; justly thinking that though 'the practice of physic may seem to flow from hypotheses, yet, if the hypotheses are solid and true, they in some measure owe their origin to practice.'"—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v. 1867, 868.

Collective editions of his Works in Latin (some styled Opera Universa, also Opera omnia Medica, and Opera Medica) were published Lon., 1685, (Processus Integri, in excellent Latin, first appeared in 1693, 12mo; 1705, 1734, 8vo; Lips., 1695, 1711, 8vo; 1827, 12mo; Genév., 1684, 12mo; 1696, 8vo; 1716, 2 tom. 4to; 1728, 4to; 1737, 2 tom. 4to; 1757, 2 vols. 4to; Leyd., 1726, 8vo; 1741, 1754, 8vo; Venet., 1755, 1762, fol.; Lion., 1737

4to, &c. In English, by C. Peehey, Lon., 1696, 1697, 1739, 1784, 1763, 8vo; trans., with Notes, by John Swan, M.D., 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; again, improved, with Notes by George Wallis, M.D., 1788, (some 1789,) 2 vols. 8vo; same, with Notes by Benjamin Rush, M.D., Phila., 1809, 8vo.

"The edition entitled 'Opera Medica,' published at Geneva, in 2 vols. 4to, in 1715, is preferable to the English editions. The translation of his works by Dr. Swan is well executed; the best edition of it is that of Dr. Wallis, in 2 vols. 8vo, published in 1789."—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 888.

"Translations have been made into almost all the Modern languages. In 1696 a work was published, entitled, The Practice of Physic, by Sydenham, which is a sort of compilation from his writings, 8vo. Compendium Praxeos Medicæ Sydenhami, Lond., 1719, 18mo."—Dr. Watt: Bibl. Brit.

The Sydenham Society have published: Thomas Sydenham, M.D., Opera Omnia, edidit G. A. Greenhill, M.D., 1846, 8vo, pp. 668; and The Works of Thomas Sydenham, M.D., translated from the Latin Edition of Dr. Greenhill, with a Life of the Author, by R. G. Latham, M.D., &c., 1848-50, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. cviii., 276, viii., 296.

"All that remains of Sydenham's writing is contained in 646 octavo pages. Of these, 222 pages consist of descriptions of the various epidemics which he had himself observed. The remainder is divided between the few monographs upon particular diseases, such as hysteria, gout, dropsy, &c., and a collection of practical memoranda or empirical formulæ, for the guidance of the practitioner of medicine. . . . The grand contribution to the development of the Art of Medicine made by the English Hippocrates was this: he proved that the true mode of cure was the direct one by specifics, and that all the indirect ones by revulsions or anodynes were precarious, mischievous, or only palliative, and thus he stands midway between Hippocrates and Hahnemann. One hand he stretches to the ancient Greek, and the other he holds out to the modern German, and so he is a link in the apostolical succession of the living Church of Medicine."—J. RUTHERFORD RUSSELL, M.D. History and Heroes of the Art of Medicine, (Lon., 1861, 8vo.) Sydenham, 269, 276.

"The incomparable Treatises are drawn (as it were) by another Hippocrates from his most exact and nice observation of Diseases and their symptoms; to which are added most judicious natural Hypotheses, and curative Indications deduced from them. He hath given such an exact history of all acute diseases, from the beginning of 1661 to 1680, that there is scarcely a sentence to be found therein, which is not of moment."—DR. CHARLES GOODBALL, (p. 608, supra.) Hist. Acc't. of the Coll. Proceed against Empirics, 1684, 4to, Epist. Ded.

"Though full of hypothetical reasoning, it had not the usual effect of making him less attentive to observation: his hypotheses seem to have sat so loosely about him, that either they did not influence his practice at all, or he could easily abandon them whenever they would not bend to his experience."—DR. JOHN GREGORY, (p. 737, supra.)

"Sydenham first discovered that the cool regimen succeeded best in Small-pox. By this discovery he saved the lives of hundreds of thousands, and we revere his memory for it, though he never heard of inoculation."—LORD MACAULAY Edin. Rev., lxi, 285.

Let us not conclude even so brief a notice of the great physician without quoting his own declaration (in his chapter on the plague) of the principles which guided his professional career.

"If the reader should find that I have anywhere erred in theory, I beg his pardon, but as to practice, I declare I have faithfully related every thing, and that I never proposed any plan of cure before I had thoroughly tried it. Indeed, when I come to die, I trust I shall have a cheerful witness in my breast, that I have not only with the greatest diligence and honesty attempted the recovery of the health of all who committed themselves to my care, . . . but that also I have laboured to the utmost of my power, if by any means it might be, that the cure of diseases may be managed after I am dead with greater certainty; for I esteem any progress in that kind of knowledge (how small soever it be) . . . to be of more value than the vain pomp of nice speculations."

Dr. Samuel Johnson wrote in 1742 a Life of Sydenham, which was prefixed to Swan's edition of the Works of the latter, 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; also published in Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1742, 633, and has been republished with Johnson's Lives of the English Poets. Johnson remarks that from his treatises may be collected

"that his skill in Physic was not his highest Excellence; that his whole Character was amiable; that his chief View was the Benefit of Mankind, and the chief Motive of his Actions the Will of God, whom he mentions with Reverence, well becoming the most enlightened and most penetrating mind. He was benevolent, candid, and communicative, sincere and religious; qualities which it were happy if they could copy from him who emulate his Knowledge and imitate his Methods."

Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, published in the North British Review for November, 1849, an essay on Locke and Sydenham, and this was republished in his Horæ Subseivæ, Edin., p. 8vo, 1858; 2d ed., 1859. He also contributed a biographical notice of Sydenham to Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xx., (1860.) We have referred to the Sydenham Society: its publications from the commencement in 1843 to its close in 1857 sum up 39 vols. 8vo, and one vol. fol., (Hunter's Human Gravid Uterus, 34 plates.) The remaining stock, consisting of upwards of 10,500 volumes, was sold at auction by Mr. L. A. Lewis, London, June 22, 1859. The New Sydenham Society (subscription, 21s. per annum) commenced its issues in 1859.

"This author wrote above 60 different Tracts, [chiefly controversial] an edition of all his works would be useful."—BISHOP WATSON

Of what use would be a republication of his many forgotten tracts, on the Bangorian Controversy, for instance? We notice: 1. An Essay upon the Truth of the Christian Religion, &c., occasioned by the 'Discourse of the Grounds,' (see COLLINS, ANTHONY,) Knapton, 1725, 8vo; Lon., 1725, 8vo; some 1. p.; 2d ed., 1755, 8vo. Scripture Doctrine of Redemption of Man by Jesus Christ, 1755, 8vo; 1756, 8vo. Recommended by Bishop Watson as one of his best works. 6. A Paraphrase and Notes upon the Epistle to the Hebrews, 1755, 4to.

The Soul's Errand (in consequence of an alteration of it published with his poems and translations, 1641, fol., ut infra) has often been ascribed to Sylvester. It is as the translator of Du Bartas's poems that he is best known: he published an English version of this poet's Canticle of the Victorie obtained by the French King Henrie the Fourth at Yvry, 1590, 4to, of his Triumph of Faith, &c., 1592, 4to; of his Second Weekes, 1598, 8vo; of his Miracle of the Peace in France, 1599, 4to; of his Devine Weekes and Workes, 1598, 16mo, (ea. part with separate title-page, dedication, &c.,) 2d ed., 1606, 4to, some l. p.; 3d ed., (1611,) 4to: Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 654, £1 1s.; 4th ed., (1613,) 4to. Three years after Sylvester's death appeared: 6. Du Bartas his Divine Weekes and Workes, with a Complete Collection of all the other most delightfull Workes translated and written by ye famous Philomusus Josuah Sylvester, Gent., 1621, fol.; 2d ed., 1633, fol.; 3d ed., 1644, fol.

"Both the version of Sylvester, and his original poems, published with it, are remarkable for their inequality for great beauties and for glaring defects. His versification is sometimes exquisitely melodious, and was recognized as such by his contemporaries, who distinguished him by the appellation of 'silver-tongued Sylvester.'"—Dr. Drake: Shaksp. and his Times, l. 568.

In his Literary Hours (3d ed., vol. iii., Nos. 49, 50, and 51) Drake comments on and quotes copiously from Sylvester's Du Bartas. Baxter, (Prefatory Address to his Poetical Fragments, 1681, sm. 8vo, reprinted 1821, 12mo,) after declaring that Quarles "outwent" George Wither, proceeds to declare, "Sylvester, or Dubartas, seems to me to outdo them both."

By greater critics he is as greatly praised:

"And after thee glus Bartas he to rayse
His heavenly muse the Almighty to adore."

"Bartas was some French angel girl with bays,
And thou a Bartas art in English Lays."

"But I will sweeten this discourse also out of a contemplation in divine Dubartas."—ISAAC WALTON.

Not so enthusiastic is Mr. Hallam:

"The translation [of La Semaine] by Sylvester has rendered it in some measure familiar to the readers of our old poetry; and attempts have been made, not without success, to show that Milton had been diligent in picking jewels from this mass of bad taste and bad writing."—*Lit. "I cannot but conceiv in a suspicion which Mr. Croker has communicated to me," says Mr. Cunningham, "that Pope had planned a Dunciad long before Theobald's offence, with Knuden, or Cibber, or some one not less notorious, for the hero of his poem."—Johnson's Life of Pope, 180, n.

"No one," says Richardson, "was ever more tender and sore to rally than Pope, who was so great a master of it, nor consequently more resentful: too strong a proof of this was his long affair with Colley Cibber."—Richardsoniana, 1776, 8vo, 311.

But let us look a little into the plan and execution of this famous satire:

"Of 'The Dunciad,' the hint is confessedly taken from Dryden's 'MacFlecknoe'; but the plan is so enlarged and diversified as justly to claim the praise of an original, and affords perhaps the best specimen that has yet appeared of personal satire ludicrously pompous. . . . The beauties of this poem are well known, its chief fault is the grossness of its images. Pope and Swift had an unnatural delight in ideas physically impure, such as every other tongue utters with unwillingness, and of which every ear shrinks from the mention. But even this fault, offensive as it is, may be forgiven for the excellence of other passages, such as the formation and dissolution of Moore, the account of the Traveller, the misfortune of the Florist, and the crowded thoughts and stately numbers which dignify the concluding paragraphs. The alterations which have been made in 'The Dunciad,' not always for the better, require that it should be published, as in the present collection, with all its varieties. If it had been possible for those who were attacked to conceal their pain and their resentment, 'The Dunciad' might have made its way very slowly in the world."—Johnson's Life of Pope, 64, 130, 131.

But to conceal "pain and resentment" under such provocation was "too much to expect from flesh and blood."

"The thong with which he lashed them was dreadful, he fired upon that howling crew such shafts of flame and poison, he slew and wounded so fiercely, that in reading 'The Dunciad' and the prose lampoons of Pope, one feels disposed to side against the ruthless little tyrant, at least to pity those wretched little folks upon whom he was so unmerciful."—Thackeray's English Humourists, ed. 1858, 228.

"Some one said to Lord Chesterfield, he wondered Pope was not beaten for his personality in his satires. Lord Chesterfield said, 'What was everybody's business is no one's business.'"—HORACE WALPOLE'S MS. Note quoted in Mitford's Gray, v. 182, but taken by us, as are many of these illustrations, from Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives, (see supra).

"There is a general outcry against that part of the poem which is thought an abuse on the Duke of Chandos. Other parts are quarrelled with as obscure and inharmonious, and I am told there is an advertisement that promises a publication of Mr. Pope's Epistle versified. I am surprised Mr. Pope is not weary of making enemies."—Dr. Delany to Sir Thomas Hanmer, 23d Dec 1731. Hanmer's Correspondence, 217.

"He [Dryden] died, nevertheless, in a good old age, possessed of the kingdom of Wit, and was succeeded by King Alexander, surnamed Pope. This prince enjoyed the crown many years, and is thought to have stretched the prerogative much farther than his predecessor. He is said to have been exceedingly jealous of the affections of his subjects, and to have employed various spies, by whom if he was informed of the least suggestion against his title, he never failed of branding the accused person with the word dunce on his forehead in large letters, after which the unhappy culprit was obliged to lay by his pen forever, for no bookseller would venture to print a word that he wrote. He did indeed put a total restraint on the liberty of the press, for no person durst read anything which was writ without his license and approbation, and this license he granted only to four during his reign, namely, to the celebrated Dr. Swift, to the ingenious Dr. Young, to Dr. Arbuthnot, and to one Mr. Gay, four of his principal courtiers and favourites. But, without diving any deeper into his character, we must allow that King Alexander had great merit as a writer, and his title to the kingdom of Wit was better founded, at least, than his enemies have pretended."—FIELDING's Covent Garden Journal, No. 23, Saturday, March 21, 1752.

"The Dunciad has splendid passages; but in general it is dull, heavy, and mechanical."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. IV.

De Quincey considers the Dunciad as worthy of

"the everlasting admiration of posterity, the very greatest of Pope's works, a monument of satirical power the greatest which man has produced, not excepting the MacFlecknoe of Dryden."

With all its defects of plan, the poem, [Book the Fourth,] as to execution, is superior to all which Pope has done, and more profoundly poetic. The parodies drawn from Milton, as also in the former books, have a beauty and effect which cannot be expressed."—Encyc. Brit.

"'The Dunciad' is blemished by the offensive images of the games; but the poetry appears to me admirable, and though the fourth book has obscurities, I prefer it to the three others. It has descriptions not surpassed by any poet that ever existed, and which surely a writer more ingenious will never equal. The lines on Italy, on Venice, on Convents, have all the grace for which I contend as distinct from poetry, though united with the most beautiful."—Horace Walpole to J. Pinkerton, June 26, 1785. Letters, ed. 1861, viii 568.

Mr. Thackeray is eloquent in his commendation of the concluding lines of the Fourth Book:

"No poet's verse ever mounted higher than that wonderful flight with which the 'Dunciad' concludes. ['She comes, she comes, &c.]. In these astonishing lines Pope reaches, I think, to the very greatest height which his sublime art has attained, and shows himself the equal of all poets of all time."—English Humourists, 230-231.

"Can you be fond of these? Of Pope I might; at least I might love his genius, his wit, his greatness, his sensibility; with a certain conviction that at some fancied slight, some sneer which he imagined, he would turn upon me and stab me."—Thackeray: George the Second.

"The Dunciad of Mr. Pope is an everlasting monument of how much the most correct, as well as the most elegant and harmonious, of all the English poets, had been hurt by the criticisms of the lowest and most contemptible authors."—ADAM SMITH: The Theory of Moral Sentiments, Part 3, chap. ii.: Of Duty.

Boswell is honest enough to quote a remark of his great preceptor which does not place the pupil and narrator in the most dignified position:

"Johnson . . . repeated to us, in his forcible, melodious manner, the concluding lines of the Dunciad. While he was talking loudly in praise of these lines, one of the company [which one?] ventured to say, 'Too fine for such a poem. a poem on what?' JOHNSON (with a disdainful look), 'Why, on dunces. It was worth while being a dunce then. Ah, sir, hadst thou lived in those days!'"

On another occasion Johnson suggested that Boswell had lost his chance of immortality by not having flourished in the days of the Dunciad. See Boswell, by Croker, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 203.

An eminent critic of our day thus refers to one of his favourite passages in the Dunciad:

"It is remarkable that Mr. Campbell, in selecting proofs from Pope, (whom he most justly defends from all the puny attacks of taste vitiated by theory, and judgment perverted by paradox,) should, to show his power of picturesque description, have omitted the finest example of all, the Italy in his 'Dunciad'.

'To happy convents, buried deep in vines,
Where slumber abbeys purple as their wines,' &c.

8. AN ESSAY ON MAN.

That the germ of this poem was supplied by Lord Bolingbroke is not to be doubted:

"In the year 1763, being at London, I was carried by Dr. John Blair, prebendary of Westminster, to dine at old Lord Bathurst's, where we found the late Mr. Mallet, Sir James Porter, &c. The conversation turning on Mr. Pope, Lord Bathurst told us that the 'Essay on Man' was originally composed by Lord Bolingbroke in prose, and that Mr. Pope did no more than put it into verse, that he had read Lord Bolingbroke's manuscript in his own handwriting, and remembered well that he was at a loss whether most to admire the elegance of Lord Bolingbroke's prose or the beauty of Mr. Pope's verse. When Lord Bathurst told this, Mr. Mallet made me attend, and remember this remarkable piece of information, as by the course of nature I might survive his Lordship and be a witness of his having said so."—Dr. Hugh Blair to Boswell, Sept. 21, 1779.

"In the conclusion ['Come then, my friend!'] it is sufficiently acknowledged that the doctrine of the 'Essay on Man' was received from Bolingbroke. The 'Essay' plainly appears the fabric of a poet: what Bolingbroke supplied could be only the first principles, the order, illustration, and embellishments must all be Pope's."—Johnson's Life of Pope, 67.

The author gives us the reason for not affixing his name to the three first Epistles.

"But truly I had not the least thought of stealing applause by suppressing my name to that Essay. I wanted only to hear truth, and was more afraid of my partial friends than enemies."—Pope to Mr. Duncombe, 20th Oct. 1734.

He certainly sought to elicit the "truth."

"Pray what is your opinion of it? I hear some cry it extremely up, others think it obscure in part, and some (of whom I am sure you are not one) have said it is mine. I think I could show you some faults in it, and believe you can show me more upon the whole, it is allowed to have merit, and I think so myself."—Pope to Richardson Senior.

At least in one memorable instance Pope heard an honest opinion on the subject:

"About this time Pope, whom he [Mallet] visited familiarly, published his 'Essay on Man,' but concealed the author, and when Mallet entered one day, Pope asked him slightly what there was new. Mallet told him that the newest piece was something called an 'Essay on Man,' which he had inspected idly, and, seeing the utter inability of the author, who had neither skill in writing nor knowledge of his subject, had tossed it away. Pope, to punish his self-conceit, told him the secret."—Johnson's Life of Mallet.

"I chose verse, and even rhyme," says Pope, "for two reasons. The one will appear obvious, that principles, maxims, or precepts, so written, both strike the reader more strongly at first, and are more easily retained by him afterwards. The other may seem odd, but it is true. I found I could express them more shortly this way than in prose itself, and nothing is more certain than that much of the force, as well as the grace, of arguments or instructions, depends on their conciseness."—Pref. to Essay on Man.

The Essay was translated into French prose, and afterwards, by Resnel, with some remarks, into French verse. Both of these versions were answered by the excellent Crousas. the first in his Examen de l'Essai sur l'Homme, 1831.

poème de M. Pope, Lausanne, 1737, (see CASTER, ELIZABETH); the last, in his Commentaire sur la Traduction en vers de M. l'Abbé du Resnel de l'Essai de M. Pope, Geneva, 1738, 12mo, trans. into English, 1741, 8vo. We also notice Expressions, Similes, and Sentiments in Palingenius, translated and improved by Mr. Pope in his Essay on Man, 8vo, (see M. Palingenius, Zodiacus Vitæ, id est De Hominis Vita, Studio ac Moribus optimo instituendis libri xiii., Rotor., 1722, sm. 8vo;) Commentary upon Mr. Pope's Four Ethic Epistles, entitled an Essay on Man, Lon., 1738, 12mo. A View of the Necessitarian or Best Scheme freed from the Objections of M. Crousaz in his Examination of Mr. Pope's Essay on Man, 1739, 8vo. But Pope found his ablest ally in an ancient enemy. William Warburton, who had supplied some of the best notes to Theobald's edition of Shakespeare, pub. in opposition to Pope's essay in that line,—who had charged Pope with borrowing the labours of others for want of genius to produce something equally good,—now took up the cudgels in defence of the object of his late hostility, and carried the war into Africa by undertaking to prove not only that the Essay was not inimical to the cause of religion, but, on the contrary, was a laboured and systematic defence of truths most important to the welfare of man. His Letters to this effect, originally contributed in 1739 to the Republic of Letters and The Works of the Learned, were pub. in a collective form in 1740, 12mo, under the title of A Vindication of Mr. Pope's Essay on Man, by the Author of the Divine Legation; and in 1742, 8vo, he gave to the world A Critical and Philosophical Commentary on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man, in which is contained a Vindication of the said Essay from the Misrepresentations of Mr. De Resnel, the French Translator, and Mr. De Crousaz, . . . the Commentator, 1742, 8vo.

Pope received his champion with open arms.

"I know I meant just what you explain," he writes to him, in acknowledgment of his Letters, "but I did not explain my own meaning as well as you. You understand me as well as I do myself; but you express me better than I could express myself."—April 11, 1739.

But Richardson the younger tells a very different tale. "Warburton's Discovery of the 'regularity' of Pope's Essay on Criticism, and the whole scheme of his Essay on Man, I happen to know to be mere absurd refinement in creating conformity, and this from Pope himself, though he saw fit to adopt them afterwards. . . . I know that he never dreamed of the scheme he afterwards adopted, but he had taken terror about the clergy, and Warburton himself, at the general alarm of its fatalism and deistical tendency, of which my father and I talked with him frequently at Twickenham, without his appearing to understand it, or ever thinking to alter those passages which we suggested."—Richardsoniana, 264.

"The positions which he transmitted from Bolingbroke," says Johnson, "he seems not to have understood, and was pleased with an interpretation that made them orthodox."—Life of Pope, 100.

Dugald Stewart remarks that

"The author of the Essay on Man, from a want of precision in his metaphysical ideas, has unconsciously fallen into various expressions, equally inconsistent with each other and with his own avowed opinions," and cites passages in illustration.

Referring also to Pope's supposed "secret stab at Newton and Clarke" in the Dunciad,

"Thrust some Mechanic Cause into His place,
Or bind in matter, or diffuse in space,"

Mr. Stewart continues—

"How little was it suspected by the poet, when this sarcasm escaped him, that the charge of Spinozism and Pantheism was afterwards to be brought against himself, for the sublimest passage to be found in his writings!—

'All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul.'

Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent."

Prelim. Dissert. Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 128, 147.

Mr. Stewart quotes the lines of the historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire:

"The poverty of human language, and the obscurity of human ideas, make it difficult to speak worthily of the Great First Cause; and our most religious poets, (particularly Pope and Thomson), in striving to express the presence and energy of the Deity in every part of the universe, deviate unwarily into images which require a favourable construction. But these writers deserve that favour by the sublime manner in which they celebrate the Great Father of the universe, and by those effusions of love and gratitude which are inconsistent with the materialist's system."—Gibson's Miscell. Works, ii. 609, 610.

"The 'Essay on Man' was a work of great labour and long consideration, but certainly not the happiest of Pope's performances. The subject is perhaps not very proper for poetry, and the poet was not sufficiently master of his subject. Metaphysical morality was to him a new study he was proud of his acquisitions, and, supposing himself master of great secrets, was in haste to teach what he had learned. . . . The vigorous contrivance of some thoughts, the luxuriant amplification of others, the incidental illustrations, and sometimes the dignity, sometimes the softness, of the verses, enchain philosophy, suspend criticism, and oppress judgment by overpowering pleasure. This is true of many paragraphs; yet, if I had undertaken to exemplify Pope's felicity of composition before a rigid critic, I should not select the 'Essay on Man,' for it contains more lines unnecessarily laboured, more harshness of diction, more thoughts imperitely expressed, more levity without elegance, and more heaviness without strength, than will easily be found in all his other works."—Johnson: Life of Pope, 131, 133.

See, also, Johnson's remarks in the Rambler, No. 92.

"His Essay on Man was but one link in a general course which he had projected of moral philosophy, here and there pursuing his themes into the fields of metaphysics, but not farther in either field of morals or metaphysics than he could make compatible with a poetical treatment."—Dr. QUINCY. Encyc. Brit.

"If the question were asked, what ought to have been the best among Pope's poems, most people would answer, the Essay on Man. If the question were asked, what is the worst, all people of judgment would say, the Essay on Man. Whilst yet in its rudiments, this poem claimed the first place by the promise of its subject, when finished, by the utter failure of its execution it fell into the last."—Dr. QUINCY Essays on the Poets, 139.

But how great critics will differ!

"The success of this enterprise was astonishing. Be the philosophy what it may, the poem revived to the latest age of poetry the phenomena of the first, when precept and practice were modulated into verse, that they might write themselves in every brain and live upon every tongue."—Prof. JOHN WILSON. Blackie, Mag., livii 382.

"The Essay on Man is not Pope's best work. . . . 'He plus the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument.' All that he says, 'the very words, and to the selfsame tune,' would prove just as well that whatever is is wrong, as that whatever is is right."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. IV.

Certainly it is only fair to allow Pope to speak for himself respecting the theology of his poem. He writes to Racine—and the letter is of peculiar value as the deliberate expression of his religious sentiments in general—

"J'ai reçu enfin votre poème sur la religion, le plaisir qui me cause cette lecture eût été sans mélange si je n'avois en le chagrin de voir que vous m'imputiez des principes que j'abhorre. Je puis vous assurer, Monsr., que votre entière ignorance de notre langue m'a été beaucoup moins fatale, que la connaissance imparfaite qu'en avoient mes traducteurs, qui les a empêchés de pénétrer mes véritables sentimens. Toutes les beautés de la termination de M. D. R. ont été moins honorables à mon poème, que ces méprises continuelles sur mes raisonnemens et sur ma doctrine ne lui ont été préjudiciables. Vous verrez ces méprises relevées et réfutées dans l'ouvrage Anglois que j'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer. Cet ouvrage est un commentaire critique et philosophique par le savant auteur de la Divine Legation de Mousé. Je me flatte que le Chevalier de Ramsay, rempli comme il est d'une zèle ardent pour la vérité, voudra bien vous en expliquer le contenu. Alors je m'en rapporterai à votre justice, et je me flatte que tous vos soupçons seront dissipés. En attendant ces éclaircissemens, je ne saurois me refuser le plaisir de répondre nettement à ce que vous desirés savoir de moi. Je déclare donc hautement et très-sincèrement que mes sentimens sont diamétralement opposés à ceux de Spinoza, et même à ceux de Leibnitz, puisqu'ils sont parfaitement conformés à ceux de M. Pascal et de M. l'Archevêque de Fénelon, et que je serai glorieux d'imiter la docilité du dernier, en soumettant toujours toutes mes opinions particulières aux décisions de l'Eglise. Je suis &c. A Londres, le 1^{er} Septembre, 1742."—Œuvres de Racine.

9. TRANSLATION OF HOMER.

Of the Iliad, published, as we have seen, in 6 vols. 4to, at one guinea per vol., 654 copies were subscribed for by 575 subscribers. Of the Odyssey, published in 5 vols. 4to, 574 copies were subscribed for, at one guinea per vol. The total sum received for subscriptions and copyright was £8996 1s., of which Pope paid £800 to Browne and Fenton, leaving him a clear gain of £8196.

Mr. De Quincy prefaces the above figures by the assertion that "this was unquestionably the greatest literary labour, and profit, ever executed, not excepting the most lucrative of Sir Walter Scott's, if due allowance be made for the altered value of money."—Encyc. Brit.

"The most lucrative literary labour of Sir Walter Scott" is thus referred to by his son-in-law, Mr. Lockhart:

"The Napoleon (first and second editions) produced for them a sum which it even now startles me to mention,—£19,000."—Life of Scott, chap. lxxiii.

The topic of valuable copyrights—especially of some late American publications—is one of interest and extent; but it does not at this time claim our attention.

Swift was probably censured as extravagant in his calculations when he declared that Pope "should not begin to print until he had a thousand guineas for him in subscriptions;" how greatly, then, must the result have surprised the authors and publishers of the day! A little exultation on the part of the successful poet and his champion may readily be excused:

"But (thanks to Homer) since I live and thrive Indebted to no prince or peer alive"

POPE. 2d Epist. of 2d Book of Horace.

"Appealing to the nation's taste,
Above the reach of want is placed.
By Homer dead was taught to thrive,
Which Homer never could alive."

SWIFT. A Letter to Dr. Delany.

But Pope did not commence his arduous enterprise without misgivings:

"What terrible moments does one feel," he exclaimed, at a later day, "after one has engaged for a large work! In the beginning of my translating the Iliad, I wished anybody would hang me, a hundred times. It sat so heavily on my mind at first, that I often used to dream of it, and do sometimes still."

"He used to dream that he was engaged in a long journey, puzzled which way to take, and full of fears that he should never get to the end of it."—SPENCE

He soon became reconciled to his task.

"When I fell into the method of translating thirty or forty verses before I got up, and piddled with it the rest of the morning, it went on easy enough, and when I was thoroughly got into the way of it, I did the rest with pleasure."—Spence's Anecdotes, by Singer

Encouraged by Sir Richard Steele and by Addison, (for, whatever view may be taken of the circumstances attending the Tickell (?) version of the first book of the Iliad, he was unquestionably encouraged by Addison: see the Freeholder, No. 40,) he girded up his loins, and, as he tells us above, after a time addressed himself with energy to his work,—and "did it with pleasure," but how? It is certain that he undertook to give an English version of the greatest Greek poet whilst conscious of a very imperfect knowledge of his original. Well might he despond at the prospect. Broome writes, so late as 1727, fourteen years after the commencement and two years after the completion, of Pope's Grecian labours,

"All the crime that I have committed is saying that he is no master of Greek, and I am so confident of this, that if he can translate ten lines of Eustathius I'll own myself unjust and unworthy."—Letter to Fenton, 5th June, 1727, first pub. in Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Poets, iii. 23, n.

Of modern critics, Mr. De Quincey, whose peculiar felicity it often is to know what others can only surmise, and to be able to prove where the less fortunate are obliged to "guess," in this instance is so modest as to avow his belief only of Pope's "thorough ignorance of Greek when he first commenced his task." But surely this is very loose criticism! Between "thorough ignorance of Greek" and the amount of erudition necessary to a faithful translation of Homer, there are many gradations. But let us cite some opinions upon Pope's performance, which is the best evidence of his philological abilities. Mr. De Quincey, whose curious theory of the translation we have no time to expose, exhibits his usual audacity in the assertion that "Criticism has not succeeded in fixing upon Pope any errors of ignorance. His deviations from Homer were uniformly the result of imperfect sympathy with the naked simplicity of the antique, and therefore wilful deviations, not (like those of his more pretending competitors, Addison and Tickell) pure blunders of misapprehension."—Encyc. Brit.

One of the earliest critics of Pope's labour,—Dennis,—as we have seen, (supra), gave his opinion to the world. Another—the great Bentley—gave his to Pope; and the world soon heard it. At a dinner at Dr. Mead's, Pope was so unwise as to invite the attack:

"Pope, desirous of his opinion of the translation, addressed him thus: 'Dr. Bentley, I ordered my bookseller to send you your books; I hope you received them.' Bentley, who had purposely avoided saying any thing about Homer, pretended not to understand him, and asked, 'Books! books! what books?' 'My Homer,' replied Pope, 'which you did me the honour to subscribe for.' 'Oh,' said Bentley; 'ay, now I recollect your translation. It is a pretty poem. Mr. Pope, but you must not call it Homer.'"—SIR JOHN HAWKINS.

"The verses are good verses," exclaimed Bentley; "but the work is not Homer. It is Spondanous!"

Of course Pope abused his critic, and the latter was duly informed of the reward of his candour. It troubled the great man very little. "Ay, like enough," he replied: "I spoke against his Homer, and the portentous web never forgives."

On another occasion he is reported to have said, "This man is always abusing me or the King." Bentley died in 1742, and in the same year we have him chronicled in print, in the Fourth Book of the Dunciad, as

"The mighty scholast, whose unwearied pains
Made Horace dull, and humbled Milton's strains"

It cannot be denied that the satirist was fortunate in his selection of vulnerable points: see BENTLEY, RICHARD, p. 171, ante.

Cowper declares that the Iliad and Odyssey in Pope's hands "have no more the air of antiquity than if he had himself invented them."

A modern critic thus compares Cowper's own version with Pope's.

"Though Cowper has been too literal in his Homer, and too inattentive to the melody of his versification, yet has he infused much more of the simple majesty and manner of the divine bard than Pope, whose splendid and highly ornamented paraphrase is more adapted to the genius of Ovid than of Homer."—DR. DRAKE.

Contrasting Pope's version with that of an earlier translator, Mr. Hallam remarks,

"Chapman's translation, with all its defects, is often exceedingly Homeric, a praise which Pope himself seldom attained."—Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1864, i. 131

That Pope profited by the labours of his predecessor is very evident:

"With Chapman . . . he had very frequent consultations, and perhaps never translated any passage till he had read his version, which indeed he has been sometimes suspected of using instead of the original."—JOHNSON. Life of Pope, 28

"My copy [of Chapman's Homer] once belonged to Pope, in which he has noted many of Chapman's absolute interpolations, extending sometimes to the length of a paragraph of twelve lines. A diligent observer will easily discern that Pope was no careless reader of his rude predecessor. Pope complains that Chapman took advantage of an unmeasurable length of line. But in reality Pope's lines are longer than Chapman's."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 358.

Our author himself remarks of Chapman,

"He covers his defects with a daring fiery spirit that animates his translation, which is something like what one might imagine Homer himself to have writ before he arrived at years of discretion."—POPE

"Chapman writes and feels as a poet—as Homer might have written had he lived in England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth."—COLERIDGE

"The translation of Homer published by George Chapman is one of the greatest treasures the English language can boast."—GODWIN

"Fiery and eloquent and creative as it is, Chapman's Homer is hard reading now, and sometimes rare. Then [in Pope's day] the book was, for the general capacity, precisely the same thing as if it were not."—PROF. WILSON. Blackw. Mag., lvi. 381

Johnson tells us that in his time Chapman was "totally neglected;" and this neglect was long continued; but see CHAPMAN, GEORGE, (Hooper's ed.), supra.

We may remark, in passing, that Chapman's copy of his translation of Homer was sold to Mr. Stevens for 5s., and in 1800 passed into the library of Richard Heber, and that Pope's copy of Hobbes's translation of Homer (with MS. annotations by the former) was sold at Edinburgh in 1859 for £3 5s. Pope's own MS. copy of his translation of the Iliad, written on the backs of letters and other "accidental fragments of paper," was secured by Bolingbroke, descended from him to Mallet, and has long been in the British Museum. Liberal in some things, Pope was sparing of writing-materials, and even his friend Swift thus adverts to this peculiarity.

"Lend these to paper-sparing Pope,

And when he sits to write,

No letter with an envelope

Advance to the Grub Street Verse-Writers, 1729.

But to return to Pope's translation of course Lord Byron defends it,—for is it not Pope's?

"One word," he exclaims, "upon his so brutally abused translation of Homer. Dr. Clarke, whose critical exactness is well known, has not been able to point out above three or four mistakes in the sense through the whole Iliad. The real faults of the translation are of a different kind! So says Warton, himself a scholar. It appears by this, then, that he avoided the chief fault of a translator. As to its other faults, they consist in his having made a beautiful English poem of a sublime Greek one. It will always hold. Cowper and all the rest of the blank pretenders may do their worst: they will never wrench Pope from the hands of a single reader of sense and feeling."—Moore's Life of Byron, vol. ii. Defence of Galchius, (suppressed.)

"I have as yet read only to the end of the eighth Iliad, but, as far as I can judge, this is one of the finest translations in the English language, and, what is very extraordinary, it appears to the best advantage when compared with the original. I have read both carefully so far, and written remarks as I went along; and I think I can prove that where Pope has omitted one beauty he has added or improved four. . . . I am just on the point of finishing Homer's Iliad with Pope's translation; which I am sure I need not recommend to you."—DR. DODDINGTON. Letters to Rev. Mr. Nettleton, Aug. 5, 1726, and Mr. Hughes, Jan. 27, 1726.

"It is certainly," says Johnson, "the noblest version of poetry which the world has ever seen; and its publication must therefore be considered as one of the great events in the annals of learning. . . . The chief help of Pope in this arduous undertaking was drawn from the versions of Dryden. Virgil had borrowed much of his imagery from Homer; and part of the debt was now paid by his translator. Pope searched the pages of Dryden for happy combinations of heroic diction; but it will not be denied that he added much to what he found. He cultivated our language with so much diligence and art that he has left in his Homer a treasure of poetical elegance to posterity. His version may be said to have tuned the English tongue; for since its appearance no writer, however deficient in other powers, has wanted melody. Such a series of lines, so elaborately corrected and so sweetly modulated, took possession of the public ear, the vulgar was enamoured of the poem, and the learned wondered at the translation. . . . It is remarked by Watts that there is scarcely a happy combination of words, or a phrase poetically elegant, in the English language, which Pope has not inserted into his version of Homer. How he obtained possession of so many beauties of speech, it were desirable to know. . . . But in the most general applause discordant voices will always be heard. It has been objected by some, who wish to be numbered among the sons of learning, that Pope's version of Homer is not Homeric, that it exhibits no resemblance of the original and characteristic manner of the father of poetry, as it wants his awful simplicity, his artless grandeur, his unaffected majesty. This cannot be totally denied, but it must be remembered that necessitas quod cogit defendit,—that may be lawfully done which cannot be forborne. . . . Homer doubtless owes to his translation many Ovidian graces not exactly suitable to his character, but to have added can be no great crime, if nothing be taken away. Elegance is surely to be desired, if it be not gained at the expense of dignity. A hero would wish to be loved as well as to be revered."—Johnson's Life of Pope, 31, 127, 128, 137.

"[Boswell] mentioned the vulgar saying that Pope's Homer was not a good representation of the original. JOHNSON—'Sir, it is the greatest work of the kind that has ever been produced.'" —Boswell, by Croker, ed. 1848, 582.

"Homer is the most simple in his style of all the great poets, and resembles most the style of the poetical parts of the Old Testament. They can have no conception of his manner, who are acquainted with him in Mr. Pope's translation only. An excellent poetical performance that translation is, and faithful in the main to the original. In some places it may be thought to have even improved Homer. It has certainly softened some of his rudenesses, and added delicacy and grace to some of his sentiments. But, withal, it is no other than Homer modernised. In the midst of the elegance and luxuriance of Mr. Pope's language, we lose sight of the old bard's simplicity. I know, indeed, no author to whom it is more difficult to do justice in a translation than Homer."—Hugh Blair's Lects. on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XLIII. The Iliad of Homer.

"Pope could not resist his habit of analysis, even in the translation of Homer, who, of all poets, is least disposed to turn aside to speculate. Perhaps these deviations of Pope from the character of his author have contributed to the popularity of the English Iliad."—Ugo Foscolo Edin. Rev., Feb. 1818, 461.

"The rights, powers, and pretensions of the sovereigns of Olympus are very clearly described in the XVth book of the Iliad in the Greek original, I mean, for Mr. Pope, without perceiving it, has improved the theology of Homer."—Gibson Decline and Fall, ed. 1837, 12, n.

"Pope's translation is a portrait endowed with every merit excepting that of faithfulness to the original. The verses of Pope accustomed my ear to the sound of poetic harmony."—Gibson Memoir of my Life and Writings. Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 16.

"The English translations by Chapman, Pope, and Cowper must be regarded as failures."—WILLIAM IRRIS, Ph.D., Univ. of Bonn. Smith's Dict. of Greek and Roman Biog. and Mythol. art Homer.

"Homer is rapid in his movement, Homer is plain in his words and style; Homer is simple in his ideas, Homer is noble in his manner. Cowper renders him ill because he is slow in his movement and elaborate in his style, Pope renders him ill because he is artificial both in his style and in his words, Chapman renders him ill because he is fantastic in his ideas, Mr. Newman renders him ill because he is odd in his words and ignoble in his manner."—MATTHEW ARNOLD On Translating Homer.

We wonder what Mr. Arnold thinks of Earl Derby's Translation of the Iliad into English Blank Verse?

Lord Macaulay remarks of the rival versions of Tickell (First Book of the Iliad) and Pope,

"Neither of the rivals can be said to have translated the Iliad," &c.—Essays, ed. 1854, ii. 423. See, also, 434; i. 323.

Wordsworth declares that Pope's translation of the celebrated moonlight scene in the Iliad is "absurd;" for which blunt assertion Prof. Wilson, in Blackwood's Magazine, (xxviii. 874), takes him to task. But we have neither time nor space for further quotations, and must refer the reader to the General Index to Blackwood's Magazine, vols. i–l, 1855; and especially to Wilson's Homer and his Translators, being vol. viii., 1857, of the Works of Professor Wilson, edited by his son-in-law, Professor Ferrier. 10. POPE'S VERSIFICATION.

Our author's poetical education commenced in early youth and under parental instruction:

"Mr. Pope's father (who was an honest merchant, and dealt in Hollands wholesale) was no poet, but he used to set him to make English verses when very young. He was pretty difficult in being pleased, and used often to send him back to new-turn them. These were not good rhymes, for that was my husband's word for verses."—MR. POPE'S MOTHER Spence's Anecdotes, by Singer.

He profited by his lessons.

"In versification," he remarked, "there is a sensible difference between softness and sweetness, that I could distinguish from a boy."—Ibid.

"At fifteen years of age," he tells us, "I got acquainted with Mr. Walsh. He encouraged me much, and used to tell me that there was one way left of excelling, for, though we have several great poets, we never had any one great poet that was correct. He ended his remarks by desiring me to make accuracy my study and aim." See the conclusion of the Essay on Criticism.

Dryden admits this general want of correctness.

"It is enough for those who make poetry the business of their lives to learn that correct, yet, excepting Virgil, I never met with any which was so in any language."—Dryden's Defence of the Essay on Dramatic Poetry.

Mr. Pope wrote verses imitative of sounds so early as in this epic poem, [Alcander, "commenced a little after I was twelve"] "Shields, helms, and swords all jangle as they hang, And sound formidable with angry clang."

was a couplet of this nature in it."—Spence, by Singer.

"Homer is perpetually applying the sound to the sense. This, indeed, is one of the most exquisite beauties of poetry, and attainable by very few. I know only of Homer eminent for it in the Greek, and Virgil in Latin. I am sensible it is what may sometimes happen by chance, when a writer is warm and fully possessed of his image, however, it may reasonably be believed they designed this, in whose verses it so manifestly appears in a superior degree to all others. Few readers have the ears to be judges of it, but those who have will see I have endeavoured at this beauty."—POPE Pref. to Homer.

See Johnson's remarks on this subject in the Rambler, No. 92.

"I learned versification wholly from Dryden's works, who had improved it much beyond any of our former poets, and would, probably, have brought it to perfection, had not he been unhappily obliged to write so often in haste."—Pope Spence, by Singer.

Yet Pope's most successful poems were written with great rapidity:

"The things that I have written fastest have always pleased the most. I wrote the Essay on Criticism fast, for I had digested all the matter in prose before I began upon it in verse. The Rape of the Lock was written fast, all the machinery was added afterwards; and the making that, and what was published before, hit so well together, is, I think, one of the greatest proofs of judgment of anything I ever did. I wrote most of the Iliad fast, a great deal of it on journeys, from the pocket-Homer on that shelf there, and often forty or fifty verses in a morning in bed. The Dunciad cost me as much pains as any thing I ever wrote."—Ibid.

But he tells us, in other places,

"The sense of my faults made me correct; besides that, it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write."—Pref. to Works, 1717, 4to.

Correctness he soon attained. In the Preface to the Pastorals, written at sixteen, we are told, "Notwithstanding the early time of their production, the author esteemed these as the most correct in the versification, and musical in the numbers, of all his works. . . . In a letter of his to Mr. Walsh about this time, we find an enumeration of several niceties in versification, which perhaps have never been strictly observed in any English poem except in these Pastorals."

Lord Lansdowne, in a letter written when Pope was about seventeen, remarks,

"If he goes on as he has begun in his Pastoral way, as Virgil first tried his strength, we may hope to see English poetry vie with the Roman."

And Walsh, whom Dryden calls the best critic of his age, writes to Wycherley in July, 1705, four years before the Pastorals were printed,

"It is not flattery at all to say that Virgil had written nothing so good at his age." See notice of the Pastorals, (ante)

Among early eulogies of Pope's versification are the following:

"'Tis true, if finest notes alone could show
(Tuned justly high, or regularly low)
That we should fame to these mere vocals give,
Pope more than we can offer should receive,
For when some gliding river is his theme,
His lines run smoother than the smoothest stream," &c.
H SPANHOPE Address of Dulness, 1728, 12mo.

Thomas Cooke, who treated Pope's Homer with little respect, (see p. 422, supra), in his strictures on the translator thus does justice to his merits as a poet:

"But in his other works what beauties shine,
While sweetest music dwells on every line!
These he admired, on these he stampt his praise,
And bade them live to brighten future days."
Battle of the Poets, 1726, fol. 16.

But Dennis professes no such admiration for the monotonous excellence:

"Boileau's Pegasus has all his paces; the Pegasus of Pope, like a Kentish post-horse, is always upon the Canterbury."—Remarks upon several Passages in the Preliminaries to the Dunciad, 1729, 8vo

"He used almost always the same fabric of verse, and, indeed, by those few essays which he made of any other, he did not enlarge his reputation. Of this uniformity the certain consequence was readiness and dexterity. By perpetual practice, language had, in his mind, a systematical arrangement, having always the same use for words, he had words so selected and combined as to be ready at his call."—JOHNSON Life of Pope, 112

"Sir, a thousand years may elapse before there shall appear another man with a power of versification equal to that of Pope"—DR JOHNSON Boswell's Life, ch. lxxi.

"But ever since Pope spoiled the ears of the town
With his cuckoo-song verses, half up and half down"

LEIGH HUNT Fest of the Poets

"Considering the quantity he has written, we should think him unfortunate in the selection of his verse, did we not also consider the nature of his subjects. These, being for the most part satirical or argumentative, were no doubt better managed in rhyme, which, pointed, antithetical, sententious in its structure, gave additional keenness to his railing and force to his argument. Shackled as this kind of verse is by its own laws, in which respect it resembles the French 'monotony in wire' more than any other, we still think Pope has not relieved it by all the variety of which it is so susceptible. Every line with him seems to 'hang self-balanced on its own centre,' every pause is distributed by one uniform rule, every couplet shoots up its own sentence. This is artificial, not natural, harmony, and the ear soon becomes wearied with such a regular recurrence of sounds and pauses"—WM H. PRESCOTT N Amer Rev, Oct. 1821, 471-472.

"Dryden was the master of harmonious versification, much beyond Pope, who was too monotonous for real harmony. Nothing that Pope has written is equal to the beginning of 'The Hind and the Panther.'—SIR J. MACKINTOSH Life, i, chap. vii.

"The influence of Pope, as Johnson called it, has the defect of monotony. Exquisite in the sweet rising and falling of its clauses, it seldom or never takes the ear prisoner by a musical surprise. If Pope be the nightingale of our verse, he displays none of the irregular and unexpected gush of the songster. He has no variations. The tune is delicate, but not natural. It reminds us of a bird, all over brilliant, which pipes its one lay in a golden cage and has forgotten the green wood in the luxury of confinement. But Dryden's versification has the freedom and the freshness of the fields. Pope's modulation is of the ear, Dryden's, of the subject."—REV R A WILLMOTT Pleasures, &c. of Lit., ed. 1866, 79.

"Mr. Pope's versification has a peculiar character. It is flowing and smooth in the highest degree, far more laboured and correct than that of any who went before him. He introduced one considerable change into verse by totally throwing aside the triplets, or three lines rhyming together, in which Mr. Dryden abounded. Dryden's versification, however, has very great merit, and, like all his productions, has much spirit, mixed with carelessness. If not so smooth and correct as Pope's, it is, however, more varied and easy."—HUGH BLAIR'S Lectures on Rhetoric, &c., Lect. XXXVIII.

"An artificial style of composition can please only when it has the exquisite grace and finish and clear-pointed thought of Pope, or the power and dignity of Milton."—JOHN FOSTER Life and Correspondence, ed. 1866, ii. 119.

"The compact and pointed diction which adds zest to the verses of Pope and Boileau."—LORD MACAULAY Criticism on the Principal Italian Writers, No. 1, Dante, Knight's Quar. Mag., Jan. 1824, and Essays, N. York, 1860, i. 60.

Lord Macaulay, giving the history of the heroic couplet, remarks,

"Like other mechanical arts, it was gradually improved by means of many experiments and many failures. It was reserved for Pope to discover the trick, to make himself complete master of it, and to teach it to everybody else. From the time when his Pastorals appeared, heroic versification became matter of rule and compass, and, before long, all artists were on a level. Hundreds of dunces who never blundered on one happy thought or expression were able to write reams of couplets, which, as far as euphony was concerned, could not be distinguished from those of Pope himself, and which very clever writers of the reign of Charles the Second—Rochester, for example, or Marvell, or Oldham—would have contemplated with admiring despair."—Crit. and Hist. Essays, ed. 1864, iii. 366.

See, also, his lordship's remarks under HOOLE, JOHN, (supra.)

"Pope gave our heroic couplet its strictest melody and tersest expression. D'un mot mis en sa place il enseigne le pouvoir. If his contemporaries forgot other poets in admiring him, let him not be robbed of his just fame on pretence that a part of it was superfluous. The public ear was long fatigued with repetitions of his manner; but if we place ourselves in the situation of those to whom his brilliancy, succinctness, and animation were wholly new, we cannot wonder at their being captivated to the fondest admiration. In order to do justice to Pope, we should forget his imitators, if that were possible, but it is easier to remember than to forget by an effort,—to acquire associations than to shake them off. Every one may recollect how often the most beautiful air has palled upon his ear, and grown unpleasing, from being played or sung by vulgar musicians. It is the same thing with regard to Pope's versification. That his peculiar rhythm and manner are the very best in the whole range of our poetry need not be asserted. He has a gracefully peculiar manner, though it is not calculated to be an universal one, and where, indeed, shall we find the style of poetry that could be pronounced an exclusive model for every composer? His pauses have little variety, and his phrases are too much weighed in the balance of antithesis. But let us look to the spirit that points his antithesis, and to the rapid precision of his thoughts, and we shall forgive him for being too antithetical and sententious."—Campbell's Specimens of the British Poets

Haslitt does not share in the general enthusiasm on this subject:

"His excellence is by no means faultlessness. If he had no great faults, he is full of little errors. His grammatical construction is often lame and imperfect. . . . Pope's rhymes are constantly defective, being rhymes to the eye instead of the ear, and this to a greater degree not only than in later but than in preceding writers. The praise of his versification must be confined to its uniform smoothness and harmony. In the translation of the Iliad, which has been considered as his master-piece in style and execution, he continually changes the tenses in the same sentence for the purpose of rhyme, which shows either a want of technical resources, or great inattention to punctilious exactness."—Lectures on the Eng. Poets, Lect. IV.

"Pope's rhymes too often supply the defect of his reasons"—ARCHBISHOP W. HATLEY

11. POPE'S GENERAL MERITS AS A POET.

Would that we had space for Johnson's admirable comparison between Pope and Dryden!—but this must be enjoyed by the reader in the original, whilst we are forced to content ourselves with the citation of a few lines from the conclusion of the biography:

"Pope had, in proportions very nicely adjusted to each other, all the qualities that constitute genius. He had Invention, by which new trains of events are formed and new scenes of imagery displayed, as in 'The Rape of the Lock,' and by which extrinsic and adventitious embellishments and illustrations are connected with a known subject, as in the 'Essay on Criticism.' He had Imagination, which strongly impresses the writer's mind, and enables him to convey to the reader the various forms of nature, incidents of life, and energies of passion, as in his 'Eloisa,' 'Windsor Forest,' and the 'Ethic Epistles.' He had Judgment, which selects from life or nature what the present purpose requires, and by separating the essence of things from its concomitants, often makes the representation more powerful than the reality, and he had colours of language always before him, ready to decorate his matter with every grace of elegant expression, as when he accommodates his diction to the wonderful simplicity of Homer's sentiments and descriptions."—JOHNSON Life of Pope, 135.

"Johnson said his characters of men were admirably drawn, those of women not so well."—Boswell, by Croker, ed. 1848, 203.

"When Johnson had finished his preface to Shakspeare, Mr. Thrale said, 'Oh, sir, you have driven Pope quite into the shade.' 'I fear not, sir,' was our doctor's reply, 'the little fellow has done wonders.'"—Mrs. Thrale's note, in her copy of Johnson's Lives, quoted in Cat. of W. H. Burton's Library, N. York, 1860, 126.

"I am bound to acquiesce in Johnson's opinion of Pope, because it has always been my own. I could never agree with those who preferred him to Dryden, nor with others (I have known such, and persons of taste and discernment too) who could not allow him to be a poet at all. He was certainly a mechanical maker of verses, and in every line he wrote we see indubitable marks of the most indefatigable industry and labour. Writers who find it necessary to make strenuous and painful exertions are generally as phlegmatic as they are correct, but Pope was in this respect exempted from the common lot of authors of that class. With the unwearied application of a plodding Flemish painter, who draws a shrimp with the most minute exactness, he had all the genius of one of the first masters. Never, I believe, were such talents and such industry united. But I admire Dryden most, who has succeeded by mere dint of genius, and in spite of a laziness and carelessness almost peculiar to himself. His faults are numberless, but so are his beauties. His faults are those of a great man, and his beauties are such (at least sometimes) as Pope, with all his touching and retouching, could never equal."—COWPER, Letter to Unwin, Jan. 6, 1782.

"He [Johnson] observed that in Dryden's poetry there were passages drawn from a profundity which Pope could never reach."—Boswell, by Croker, 203.

"The school of Dryden and Pope, which prevailed till a very late period of the last century, is neither the most poetical nor the most national part of our literary annals. These great poets sometimes indeed ventured into the regions of pure poetry; but their general character is, that 'not in fancy's maze they wandered long; and that they rather approached the elegant correctness of our Continental neighbours, than supported the daring flight which in the former age had borne English poetry to a sublime elevation than that of any other modern people of the West.'—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Works, ed. 1854, ii. 601-608.

"We criticised Pope's lines 'On an Unfortunate Lady' He [Sir J. Mackintosh] would not allow that they were cold, which I thought they were, repeating 'By foreign hands,' &c., and adding, 'Surely these are not cold.' He was much moved in repeating them."—Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, ii., chap. vii.

"Shall I venture to own to you that in mental power I give him only the third place among the wits of his time? In talent, that is, in power formed and directed by habit to one sort of exertion, his place may be higher. He had a greater talent for brilliant and sententious verse than perhaps any of his contemporaries had for any other kind of literary excellence. I really think that his great merit is the same with that of a writer of maxims. His observations on life are both sensible and fine, but they are seldom his own, they have not the truth of immediate experience, and in his maxims, like that of his brethren, the truth is always in part sacrificed to the brilliancy, some part of the jewel is cut away in polishing. A talent very inferior to a man's general power of mind, especially when joined to mannerism, strikes me as a sort of knack. Estimated by the two great faculties of the human mind, his place must be where I have assigned it. Swift was as much above him in understanding, as Addison in imagination,—not to mention taste. Both Swift and Addison are more classical writers; that is, their writings approach more near to the models of beauty in their respective kinds."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, ii., chap. ii.

"Pope has incomparably more spirit and taste and animation than Addison."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 179.

"Where, then, according to the question proposed at the beginning of this Essay, shall we with justice be authorized to place our admired Pope? Not, assuredly, in the same rank with Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton; however justly we may applaud the Elousa and Rape of the Lock. But, considering the correctness, elegance, and utility of his works, the weight of sentiment and the knowledge of man they contain, we may venture to assign him a place next to Milton, and just above Dryden. Yet, to bring our mind steadily to make this decision, we must forget for a moment the divine Music Ode of Dryden, and may perhaps then be compelled to confess that, though Dryden be the greater genius, yet Pope is the better artist.

"The preference here given to Pope above other modern English poets, it must be remembered, is founded on the excellencies of his works in general, and taken all together, for there are parts and passages in other modern authors—in Young and in Thomson, for instance—equal to any of Pope, and he has written nothing in a strain so truly sublime as the Bard of Gray."—JOSEPH WARTON: Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope.

"If Pope must yield to other poets in point of fertility of fancy, yet in point of propriety, closeness, and elegance of diction he can yield to none."—JOSEPH WARTON.

"What rank should be assigned to Pope in a classification of our English poets, has been a subject of frequent inquiry. It is evident that by far the greater part of his original productions consists of ethic and satiric poetry, and by those who estimate mere moral sentiment, or the exposure, in splendid versification, of fashionable vice or folly, as the highest principle of the art, he must be considered as the first of bards. If, however, sublimity, imagination, and pathos be, as they assuredly are, the noblest efforts of the creative powers, and the most difficult of attainment, Pope will be found to have some superiors, and several rivals. With Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton he cannot, in these essential qualities, enter into competition, and when compared with Dryden, Young, and Thomson, the mind hesitates in the allotment of superiority."—DR DRAKE.

"In the enthusiasm, the fire, the force and copiousness of poetic genius, Dryden, though a much less correct writer, appears to have been superior to him. One can scarcely think that he was capable of epic or tragic poetry, but within a certain limited region he has been outdone by no poet. The qualities for which he was chiefly distinguished are, judgment and wit, with a concise and happy expression and a melodious versification. Few poets ever had more wit, and, at the same time, more judgment to direct the proper employment of that wit."—HUGH BLAIR: Lect. on Rhetoric, Lect. XL.

Yet Pope did not think himself unequal to epic poetry: "I should certainly have written an Epic Poem, if I had not been engaged in the translation of Homer."—Spence, by Singer. Dryden and Pope are the great masters of the artificial style of poetry in our language, as the poets of whom I have already treated, Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton, were of the natural; and though this artificial style is generally and very justly acknowledged to be inferior to the other, yet those who stand at the head of that class ought, perhaps, to rank higher than those who occupy an inferior place in a superior class."—HARSHILL'S Lect. on the English Poets, Lect. IV. See, also, Appendix, iv.

"That Pope was neither so insensible to the beauties of nature, nor so indistinct in describing them, as to forget the character of a true poet, is what I mean to urge, without exaggerating his picturesqueness."—Campbell's Specimens of the British Poets.

Mr. Rogers tells us that Charles James Fox liked Pope, but thought him much inferior to Dryden. Fitzpatrick was a great Papist, and would not hear of the Rape of the Lock as his best. Perhaps his Homer should be mentioned as his great work, after all."—Recollections, by S. Rogers, 1859, 48.

"There are no pictures of nature or of simple emotion in all his writings. He is the poet of town life and of high life and of literary life, and seems so much afraid of incurring ridicule by the display of natural feeling or unregulated fancy, that it is difficult not to imagine that he would have thought such ridicule very well directed."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 380.

"We shall not enter into the question whether Pope had most taste or genius. Perhaps he was destined by nature for bold invention; but in fact he has, in general, imitated with taste. The same thing may be said of Horace, Vida, and Boileau. Pope, like them, was a critic as well as a poet. It is a curious observation that no poet of the first rank has ever spoken of the mechanism of his art, while poets of inferior station have laboriously displayed its rules in verse."—UGO FOSCOLO: Edin. Rev., Feb. 1818, 461.

"The most striking characteristics of his poetry are lucid arrangement of matter, closeness of argument, marvellous condensation of thought and expression, brilliancy of fancy ever supplying the aptest illustrations, and language elaborately finished almost beyond example."—REV. ALEXANDER DYCE.

"In the judgment of England, in the eighteenth century, the reputation of Pope may be called the most dazzling in English literature. It was a nearer sun than Dryden, Milton, Shakespeare, as for Spenser and Chaucer, they were little better than fixed stars."—PROF. JOHN WILSON: Blackw. Mag., LVII, 380.

"Pope, as the follower of Dryden in verse, excelled him as much in grace and harmony of numbers as he might be deemed to fall below him in raciness and pithy originality."—JAMES MONTGOMERY: View of Mod. Eng. Lit., No. 1.

"Pope, the prince of lyric poetry, unrivalled in satire, ethica, and polished versification."—SMOLLETT: Hist. of Eng. George I., Notes.

"This prince of lyric poetry."—LORD CAMPBELL: Lives of the Chief Justices, ii., ch. xxx.

"Pope was an exquisite satirist, but it is not an exquisite satirist that is to show up such a city as London to scorn. In his serious poetry sorrow is seen, we think, through many passages; and his mirth, which is rare, is still seldom without a tinge—a dash of melancholy. It was only when he gave vent to love or indignation that he was a great writer."—PROF. JOHN WILSON: Works, v. 1856, 231-232.

"The fault of a great part of Pope is that there is nothing but reasoning, without either imagination or sentiment."—SIR S. E. BRIDGES: Remarks on Milton's Comus.

"In Pope I cannot read a line
But with a sigh I wish it mine,
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six."

SWIFT: On Imitary a Rhapsody.
"Pope's talent lay remarkably in what one may naturally enough term the condensation of thoughts. I think no English poet ever brought so much sense into the same number of lines with equal smoothness, ease, and poetical beauty. Let him who doubts of this peruse the Essay on Man with attention."—BAYNESTON: Essay on Men and Manners.

"He [Gray] approved an observation of Shenstone, that 'Pope had the art of condensing a thought.'"—NICHOLLS'S Reminiscences of Gray, 37.

Mr. De Quincey, referring to Voltaire's acquaintance with Pope, remarks,

"Speaking of him after death to Frederick of Prussia, he prefers him to Horace and Boileau, asserting that, by comparison with them,

'Pope approfondit ce qu'ils ont effleuré
D'un esprit plus hardi, d'un pas plus assuré,
Il porta le flambeau dans l'abîme de l'étre,
Et l'homme avec lui seul apprit à se connaître.
L'art quelquefois frivole, et quelquefois divine,
L'art des vers dans Pope utile au genre humain.'"

Life of Pope, in Encyc. Brit.

Mr. De Quincey, on his own account, pronounces Pope "the most brilliant of all wits who have at any period applied themselves to the poetic treatment of human manners; to the selecting from the play of human character what is picturesque or the arresting what is fugitive."—Ibid.

"Not therefore for superior correctness," remarks Mr. De Quincey, on a later page,— "but for qualities the very same as belong to his most distinguished brethren, is Pope to be considered a great poet, for impassioned thinking, powerful description, pathetic reflection, brilliant narration. His characteristic difference is simply that he carried these powers into a different field, and moved chiefly amongst the social paths of men, and viewed their characters as operating through their manners."—Ubi supra.
"Pope, in his characters of men and women, tells us their several opinions and passions, but these opinions and passions should be uttered by themselves. There is a sympathy we feel with the eloquent relater of his own sorrows, which cannot be raised by the relation of a third person."—SIR S. E. BRIDGES: Remarks on Milton's Samson Agonistes.

"The most harmonious, correct, and popular of the English poets."—ROSCOR.

See the Estimate of the Poetical Character and Writings of Pope prefixed to vol. ii. of Roscoe's ed. of Pope's Works. It may be questioned if Pope is as much read as formerly; but his reputation as a poet has certainly suffered no abatement, nor is it likely that he will ever be displaced from his exalted position; but few love him,—as they love Shakespeare, Dante, and Milton.

"That great poet, and little man"—LORD BROUGHAM Contrib to Edin. Rev., 1850, i, 183.

"Besides that brilliant genius and immense fame for both of which we should respect him, men of letters should admire him as being the greatest literary artist that England has seen . . . He polished, he refined, he thought; he took thoughts from other works to adorn and complete his own, borrowing an idea or a cadence from another poet as he would a figure or a simile from a flower or a river-stream, or any object which struck him in his walk or contemplation of nature"—Thackeray's English Humourists, ed 1855, 232

"We acknowledge in Pope the sprightliness of an elegant fancy, grateful dignity of sentiment, a wit unceasing yet never tiring, satire playful yet severe, an accurate taste, a sententiousness of expression neither weakened by affectation nor clouded by ambiguity, and a uniform polish of language never rivaled."

"We acknowledge and admire all these splendid attributes of genius of Pope; but we still think him wanting in that power of awakening the most sublime and tender emotions to requite to the perfection of poetry"—WM H PRESCOTT N. Amer. Rev., Oct 1821 Byron's Letter on Pope

See, also, Prescott's article on English Literature of the Nineteenth Century, in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1832, 167, and his Miscellanies, ed. 1855, 483, 602.

But we have just written the name of Byron, and who has ever equalled his lordship in his admiration of the Bard of Twickenham?

"He is the moral poet of all civilization!" exclaims his noble eulogist, "and, as such, let us hope that he will one day be the national poet of all mankind. He is the only poet that never shocks, the only poet whose faultlessness has been made his reproach. Cast your eye over his productions, consider their extent, and contemplate their variety,—pastoral, passion, mock-heroic, translation, satire, ethics,—all excellent, and often perfect. If his great charm be his melody, how comes it that foreigner adore him, even in their diluted translations?"—*Letter to  [John Murray] on the Rev. W L Boules's Structures on the Life and Writings of Pope, 1821

Again

"Neither time, nor distance, nor grief, nor age, can ever diminish my veneration for him, who is the great moral poet of all times, of all climes, of all feelings, and of all stages of existence. The delight of my boyhood, the study of my manhood, perhaps (if allowed to me to attain it) he may be the consolation of my age. His poetry is the Book of Life. Without canting, and yet without neglecting religion, he has assembled all that a good and great man can gather together of moral wisdom clothed in consummate beauty. Such 'a poet of a thousand years' was Pope. A thousand years will roll away before such another can be hoped for in our literature. But it can want time, he himself is a literature!"—Suppressed Defence of Gilchrist Moore's Life of Byron, N. York, 1831, n 327-328. See, also, 102, 221, 253, 246, 277, 258, 259, 273, 278, 320, 321, 328, 329, Lady Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron, Boston, 1859, 237

"Of Pope himself [Lord Byron] spoke with extravagant admiration. He did not venture directly to say that the little man of Twickenham was a greater poet than Shakespeare or Milton, but he hinted pretty clearly that he thought so"—LORD MACAULAY Crit and Histor. Essays, ed 1854, i 335

12 POPE'S MERITS AS A COMMENTATOR ON SHAKESPEARE.

Whether Mr Singer be correct or not in his surmise that "perhaps Pope did not relish Shakespeare more than he seems to have done Milton," (Spence's Anec., ed. 1820, 200, n.) we shall not venture to decide, but certain it is that he did not (honourably) distinguish himself as a Shakespearean commentator. His heart was not in the business, it was no labour of love

"The edition of Shakespeare (which he undertook merely because he thought nobody else would) took up near two years more in the drudgery of comparing impressions, rectifying the scenery, &c"—POPE Note in Dunciad, 1736, 12mo, 224

For this "drudgery" Pope received the sum of £217 12s. Tonsen sold the principal part of the edition of 750 copies of Shakespeare's Works, thus edited, at six guineas for the six quarto volumes. But subsequently 140 copies were sold at sixteen shillings for the six volumes. It was attacked by Theobald in his Shakespeare Restored, or Specimens of Blunders Committed and Unamended in Pope's Edition of that Author, Lon., 1726, 4to, and still further exposed in Theobald's ed. of Shakespeare's Dramatic Works, with Notes, 1733, 7 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1740, 8 vols. 12mo. Pope and Warburton endeavoured to return Theobald's ridicule, but he was more than a match, in his own narrow field, for both of them. (See THEOBALD, LEWIS.)

"Mr. Pope discharged his duty so well, as to make his edition the best foundation for all future improvements"—WARBURTON Preface to his ed. of Shakespeare

"His edition of Shakespeare is probably the worst ever published. Of the conjectural emendations, Johnson's are very middling, Warburton's worse than middling and Pope's worst of all. They are universally and woefully flat"—Blackw. Mag., x 184

An intelligent foreign critic remarks of Pope's edition, "Pope asserts that he [Shakespeare] wrote both better and worse than any other man. All the scenes and passages which did not square with the littleness of his own taste, he wished to place to the account of interpolating players; and he was in the right road, had his opinion been taken, of giving us a miserable dolt of a mangled Shakespeare."—A. W. SCHLESZEL: Lects on Dramat. Art and Lit., Black's trans., 1846, 347.

Warton laments that Pope ever undertook the enterprise:

"A task which the course of his reading and studies did not qualify him to execute with the ability and skill which it deserved, and with which it has since been executed. . . The Preface is written with taste, judgment, purity, and elegance"

Then the Preface, Prof Wilson says, "Nothing can be better. Dryden gave us large and grand outlines, Pope's is closer criticism"—Blackw. Mag., lvi 383.

Even De Quincey—one of the most brilliant of writers and unsafe of critics—whose constant liability to the furor biographicus and lues Boewellianæ incapacitates him for the judgment—sent—has to admit that "The opinion of all judges . . . has ever since pronounced this work the very worst edition in existence. For the edition," he proceeds to remark, "we have little to plead; but for the editor it is but just to make three apologies"—Encyc. Brit.

These "three apologies" the reader can consider at his leisure; and he must also allow due weight to what is urged in the editor's favour by his greatest biographer:

"Pope in his edition undoubtedly did many things wrong, and left many things undone, but let him not be defamed of his due praise. He was the first that knew, at least the first that told, by what helps the text might be improved. If he expected the early editions negligently, he taught others to be more accurate. In his Preface he expanded with great skill and elegance the character which had been given of Shakespeare by Dryden, and he drew the public attention upon his works, which, though often mentioned, had been little read"—JOHNSON Life of Pope, 48

"I have all his [Pope's] notes, that no fragment of so great a writer may be lost, his Preface, valuable alike for elegance of composition and justness of remark, and containing a general criticism on his author, so extensive that little can be added, and so exact that little can be disputed, every editor has an interest to suppress, but that every reader would demand its insertion"—JOHNSON Pref to Shakespeare. See, also, ROBERTS, JOHN 13. POPE'S MERITS AS A LETTER-WRITER.

The history of the publication of Pope's letters has been sufficiently noticed on a preceding page. It was not to be supposed that a point so vulnerable,—the exposition of private letters,—even had the manner of promulgation been unquestionable, would be neglected by the satirist's fair but bitter enemy. Fifteen years after the publication of Pope's acknowledged quarto, (1737,) she writes to a friend,

"There cannot be a stronger proof of his [Pope's] being capable of any action for the sake of gain than publishing his literary correspondence, which lays open such a mixture of dulness and ingenuity that one would imagine it visible even to his most passionate admirers"—LADY M. W. MONTAGU to the Countess of Bute, June 23, 1752.

But, if his epistles confirmed one enemy, according to the convert's own assertion they transformed a more powerful foe into a friend

"Till his Letters were published, I had as indifferent an opinion of his morals as they [Theobald and Company] pretended to have"—WARBURTON to Hurd, Jun 12, 1757

"If I could receive letters from you and Mr Pope, as you had leisure, I would never come to town as long as I live"—DUCHESS of Marlborough to Lord Marchmont, March 15, 1742, (see ante)

"They are all over-crowded with professions of integrity and disinterestedness, with trite reflections on contentment and retirement, a diadem of greatness and courts, a contempt of fame, and an affected strain of commonplace morality"—JOSEPH WARTON.

"Pope seems to have thought that unless a sentence was well turned, and every period pointed with some conceit, it was not worth the carriage. Accordingly, he is to me, except in a very few instances, the most disagreeable maker of epistles that I ever met with"—CRONIN to Unwin, June 8, 1780.

"It is a mercy to have no character to maintain. Your predecessor, Mr. Pope, laboured his Letters as much as the 'Essay on Man,' and, as they were written to everybody, they do not look as if they had been written to anybody"—HORACE WALPOLE to Rev. Wm. Mason, Mar 13, 1777. Letters, ed 1861, vi. 422

"Gray said of his [Pope's] letters that they were not good letters, but better things"—N. NICHOLS's Reminis of Gray, 37

"Of his social qualities, if an estimate be made from his Letters, an opinion too favourable cannot easily be formed; they exhibit a perpetual and unclouded effulgence of general benevolence and particular fondness. There is nothing but liberality, gratitude, constancy, and tenderness. If the Letters of Pope are considered merely as compositions, they seem to be premeditated and artful. Pope may be said to write always with his reputation in his head, Swift, perhaps, like a man who remembered that he was writing to Pope; but Arbuthnot, like one who lets his thoughts drop from his pen as they rise into his mind. . . In the Letters both of Swift and Pope there appears such narrowness of mind as makes them insensible of any excellence that has not some affinity with their own, and confines their esteem and approbation to so small a number, that whoever should form his opinion of the age from their representation, would suppose them to have lived amidst ignorance and barbarity, unable to find among their contemporaries either virtue or intelligence, and persecuted by those that could not understand them."—JOHNSON Life of Pope, 64, 103, 104, 107

"In all his letters as well as in those of Swift, there runs a strain of pride, as if the world talked of nothing but themselves"—GOLDSMITH Life of Nash.

"The most distinguished collection of letters in the English language is that of Mr. Pope, Dean Swift, and their friends, partly published in Mr. Pope's works, and partly in those of Dean Swift. The collection is, on the whole, an entertaining and agreeable one, and contains much wit and refinement. . . . The censure of writing letters in too artificial a manner falls heaviest on Mr. Pope himself. There is visibly more study and less of nature and the heart in his letters than in those of his correspondents. He had formed himself on the manner of Voiture, and is too fond of writing like a wit. His letters to ladies are full of affectation."—HUGO BLAIR: Lect. on Rhetoric, &c., Lect. XXXVII.

"Pope, in addressing ladies, was nearly the ape of Voiture."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii. 138.

"A taint of affectation, more or less strong, runs through the whole of Pope's Letters: those to the ladies, particularly, are stuffed with miserable and frigid attempts to be gay and gallant."—GARRA: Diary of a Lover of Lit., 66.

"All his correspondents are made easy by flattery, laid on without conscience or remorse."—SINGEE: Spence's Anec., 303, n.

Mr. Thackeray does not admire Pope's letters to the ladies, (Lady Montagu, &c.) and would not advise the perusal of the first part of his correspondence, generally.

"But," he continues, "save that unlucky part of the Pope Correspondence, I do not know, in the range of our literature, volumes more delightful. You live in them in the finest company in the world. A little stately, perhaps, a little apprêlé, and conscious that they are speaking to whole generations who are listening; but in the tone of their voices,—pitched, as no doubt they are, beyond the mere conversation key,—in the expression of their thoughts, their various views and natures, there is something generous and cheering and ennobling. You are in the society of men who have filled the greatest parts in the world's story; you are with St. John the statesman, Peterborough the conqueror, Swift the greatest wit of all times, Gay the kindest laughers: it is a privilege to sit in that company."—English Humourists, ed. 1858, 196–204.

"His last letters are much superior to his early and very puerile productions, but his best are, in matter and manner, much inferior to those of Swift."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, ii, chap. ii.

"The best of those later letters between Pope and Swift, &c. are not in themselves at all superior to the letters of sensible and accomplished women, such as leave every town in the island by every post. Their chief interest is a derivative one: we are pleased with any letter, good or bad, which relates to men of such eminent talent, and sometimes the subjects discussed have a separate interest for themselves. . . . Pope especially ought not to have his ethereal works loaded by the mass of trivial prose which is usually attached to them."—DE QUINCEY: Life of Pope, in Encyc. Brit.

"No one can read them without feeling they were written for more eyes than those of his correspondents. There is a laboured smartness, a constant exhibition of fine sentiment, which is strained and unnatural. His repeated depreciation of motives of aggrandizement argues 'a thinking too precisely' on the very subject, and no man whose chief ambition was to gain a few friends would so habitually proclaim it. Those tender and delicate aspirations live in the secret places of the heart. . . . True sentiment is modest."—H. T. TUCKERMAN: Thoughts on the Poets, 3d ed. 1846, 76.

"Pope's letters very bad. I think him a foolish fellow, upon the whole, myself, but he has certainly feeling, and I like him best when not a satirist."—CHARLES JAMES FOX: Recollections, by S. Rogers, 1859, 37.

"Pope's letters and prose writings neither take away from, nor add to, his poetical reputation. There is occasionally a littleness of manner, and an unnecessary degree of caution. He appears anxious to say a good thing in every word as well as every sentence. They, however, give a very favourable idea of his moral character in all respects, and his letters to Atterbury in disgrace and exile do equal honour to both."—HAZLITT: Lect. on the English Poets, Lect. IV. See, also, eulogistic comments on Pope's letters by Leigh Hunt, in his Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.; Pope, in some lights in which he is not usually regarded, —Fraser's Mag., 1855, same, in Living Age, xlv. 183.

But what have we been doing but giving, little by little, a list of POPIANA, as we added the names of our authorities to the quotations which occupy the chief part of the preceding pages? Yet we have noted some other sources of information respecting Pope, his times, his friends, and his enemies, the titles of which we shall subjoin, as a fitting conclusion to this article. I. Both Goldsmith and Scott meditated lives of Pope and editions of his works. Would that they had carried out their good resolutions! The following curious anecdote we think well worthy of quotation:

"By one of those acts which neither science nor curiosity can excuse, the skull of Pope is now in the private collection of a phrenologist. The manner in which it was obtained is said to have been this. On some occasion of alteration in the church, or burial of some one in the same spot, the coffin of Pope was disinterred, and opened to see the state of the remains, by a bribe to the sexton of the time, possession of the skull was obtained for the night, and another skull returned instead of it. I have heard that fifty pounds were paid to manage and carry through this transaction. Be that as it may, the skull of Pope figures in a private museum."—Howell's Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets. Pope

We may appropriately conclude our life of this great poet by the citation of some lines on his character as a man and an author, by one of his distinguished associates:

"If we may judge of him by his works, his chief aim was to be esteemed a man of virtue. His letters are written in that style, his last volumes are all of the moral kind, he has avoided trifles, and consequently has escaped a rock which has proved very injurious to Dr Swift's reputation. He has given his imagination full scope, and yet has preserved a perpetual guard upon his conduct. The constitution of his body and mind might really incline him to the habits of caution and reserve. The treatment which he met with afterwards, from an innumerable tribe of adversaries, confirmed this habit, and made him slower than the Dean in pronouncing his judgment upon persons and things. His prose writings are little less harmonious than his verse, and his voice, in common conversation, was so naturally musical, that I remember how Tom Southern used to call him the little nightingale. His manners were delicate, easy, and engaging, and he treated his friends with a politeness that charmed, and a generosity that was much to his honour. Every guest was made happy within his doors, pleasure dwelt under his roof, and elegance presided at his table."—LORD ORKNEY

Dr. Popkin's learned successor in the Eliot Greek Professorship, Cornelius C. Felton—a zealous student, equally at home in the languages of Demosthenes, of Cicero, and of Chatham,—pub. in 1852 A Memorial of Rev. John Snelling Popkin, D.D., &c., Cambridge, 16mo., pp. lxxviii. and 392. The volume contains the three Lectures on Liberal Education, (supra), some selections from lectures on Greek literature, and a few passages from sermons published and unpublished. It was reviewed by George S. Hillard in the North American Review for October, 1852, 473-488

"We take leave of Professor Felton with an acknowledgment, in which we are sure that all the old pupils of Dr. Popkin will share, for his labors of love in editing this volume. Nothing can be more genial, graceful, and appropriate than the biography which Professor Felton has prefixed to this volume. It tells us all that we want to know, and no more."—474, 488, ubi supra

An interesting letter of reminiscences of Dr. Popkin, by Professor Felton, will be found in Sprague's Annals, Trin. Congreg., ii., 1857, 436-438. We extract an anecdote

"Being once asked by an anxious lady of his parish if he was a Hopkinson—a sectarian designation formerly much in vogue in the religious world,—he replied, 'Madam, I am a Popkinian.'"

"The vigour of his mind and the range of his acquirements," remarks Dr. Felton, "are sufficiently exhibited in his published works. His sermons are models of excellence, both in matter and manner."—SPRAGUE ubi sup., 437

Porson, Richard, 1759-1808, a native of East Ruston, Norfolk, where his father was parish clerk, received his early education from Mr. Summers, of Hap-pesburgh, and Mr. Charles Hewitt, Vicar of East Ruston and Bacton, and was, by the kind offices of Mr. Norris, of Witton, placed at Eton on the foundation in 1774. Mr. Norris died whilst his protégé was at Eton, but his place as a benefactor to the youth was supplied by Sir George Baker, M.D., whose attainments as a classical scholar have been commemorated on a preceding page (103) of this Dictionary. In 1777 Porson was admitted under-graduate of Trinity College; in 1781 was elected to a University Scholarship on Lord Craven's foundation, and on his taking his degree of B.A., in 1782, was third senior optime and senior medallist; in October, 1782, became Fellow of his college; in 1785 took the degree of M.A.; in 1790 was made Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge, (salary £40 per annum;) was deterred from taking orders by scruples respecting subscription to the Thirty-Nine Articles, and therefore, according to rule, vacated his fellowship in 1791, in November, 1795, married Mrs. Lunan, (she survived the marriage about eighteen months,) sister of Mr. Periy of the Morning Chronicle, (supra;) in 1806 was appointed Head Librarian of the London Institution, (salary £200 per annum,) established in that year, and died in his rooms in the Old Jewry, September 23, 1808.

"While he [Pitt] was in power, the greatest philologist of his age, his own contemporary at Cambridge, was reduced to earn a livelihood by the lowest literary drudgery, and to spend in writing squibs for the Morning Chronicle, years to which we might have owed an all-but perfect text of the whole tragic and comic drama of Athens"—LORD MACAULAY, Life of William Pitt, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xvii, 1859.

That his constitution, which had been much impaired by spasmodic asthma, was injured by intemperance, is not to be denied, that he was a habitual drunkard, as often asserted, has been denied on good authority; and the charge is fully disproved by the extent and the character of his learned labours. In 1792, about £2000 was voted for his benefit in the funds, and after his death the interest of £400 of this money was devoted to an annual prize still known as the Porson Prize. A vol. entitled the Porson Prize Exercises, 1817-50, was pub. at Cambridge in 1850, p. 8vo, new ed., 1817-56, 1857, p. 8vo. This collection must not be neglected by the classical student, who must also peruse Dr. Thomas Young's memoir of Porson, (to which we have been largely indebted in this article,) in Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., (repub. in part, in 8th ed., and see, also, Young's Works, 1853, vol. iii.) and the authorities referred to at conclusion of this sketch.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF PORSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

I Articles in Dr. Maty's Review, viz. I. June, 1783, Strutz's Æschylus. Repub. in Porson's Tracts, &c., ed. by Kidd, 1815, 8vo.

II July, 1783, Brunck's Aristophanes. Written in a day. Repub. Tracts, iii, Mus. Crit., ii 113. In Latin, by Schafer, Class. Jour., v. 136.

III April, 1784, Weston's Hermesianax. Repub., Tracts, iv.

IV August, 1784, Huntingford's Apology for his Menostronius. Repub., Tracts, v.

V April, 1785, Account of the Learned Pig. Repub., Tracts, vi.

VI April, 1786, Note, with Letters of Le Clerc and Bentley. Repub., Tracts, vii.

2 Notes (addressed Lectori si quis erit) to Xenophon's Anabasis, Camb., 1786, 4to and 8vo. And, adject etiam Notae breves, W. Whiter, Lon., 1810, 8vo.

3 In Gent. Mag., Aug. Sept., and Oct., 1787, Three Panegyric Epistles to Sir J. Hawkins, signed SUNDY WHEREOF. Repub., Tracts, ix.

4 Notes (written in 1787) on Toupii Emendationes in Suidam, Oxf., 1790, 8vo.

5 In Gent. Mag., Oct. and Dec. 1788, Feb., April, May, June, Aug. 1789, Feb. 1790, Letters (xii) on the Three Witnesses. The last was repub. in Tracts, xix.; most of the others in the collection of Letters to Mr. Archdeacon Travis, in answer to his Defence of the Three Heavenly Witnesses, Lon., 1799, 8vo; 1800, 8vo. To these famous Letters, intended to disprove the authenticity of 1 John v. 7, we have referred on preceding pages, (see BURGESS, THOMAS, D.D.; ENGLISH, GEORGE B.; GIBBOY, EDWARD, 663; NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, No. 9, 1420, PENN, GRANVILLE, No. 10;) but a few additional quotations on a subject of such interest will readily be excused. Porson's habitual modesty—for modesty was one of his most strongly marked characteristics—did not prevent the free exposition of his own opinion as to the results of the controversy.

"[Porson] spoke with much complacency of his Letters to Travis, by which he had crushed his opponent and set the question at rest"—[Green's] Diary of a Lover of Lit., Gent. Mag., Dec. 1836, 575.

But it has seldom happened to an author to be so well supported in his natural partiality for his own productions:

"Inimitable and invincible. . . . Travis was a superficial and arrogant declaimer, and his letters to Gibbon brought down upon him the just and heavy displeasure of an assailant equally irresistible from his wit, his reasoning, and his erudition—I mean the immortal Richard Porson"—DE PARA.

"I consider Mr. Porson's answer to Archdeacon Travis as the most acute and accurate piece of criticism which has appeared since the days of Bentley. His strictures are founded in argument, enriched with learning, and enlivened with wit; and his adversary neither deserves nor finds any quarter at his hands."

"The evidence of the three heavenly witnesses would now be rejected in any court of justice. . . . The more learned ecclesiastics will indeed have the secret satisfaction of reproaching in the closet what they read in the church"—GIBSON: Musculi Works, ed. 1837, 101. See, also, 112.

"Porson's Letters to Archdeacon Travis are conspicuous for their erudition, acuteness, accuracy, violence, bitterness, and invective"—MATHIAS, Pursuits of Lit., 16th ed., 1812, fol. 135, n. 63. See, also, 100, n. 330, n.

"Displaying uncommon sobriety of judgment, keenness of perspicacity, and vigour of argumentation"—GREEN, Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 213.

"Even the prejudiced reader must now be silenced, at least, by the learned and ingenious Letters of Mr. Porson to Archdeacon Travis"—EDWARD EVANSON.

"They discover the profound learning, prodigious acuteness, and elegant wit for which Porson was distinguished above all his contemporaries. The spirit of the letters is unchristian, but they are admirable specimens of learning and acute argumentation"—ORME'S Bib. Bib., 360.

See, also, 439, and Orme's Memoir of the Controversy respecting the Heavenly Witnesses, 1 John v. 7, (referred to under ORME, WILLIAM, No. 9, supra.) Horne's Bib. Bib., 182-85.

The last published notice of the Letters to Travis occurs in the Lectures and Essays on University Subjects issued within the last few weeks (1859) by a learned champion of the Roman Catholic Communion, the Rev. John Henry Newman, D.D., (see p. 1413, supra.)

"Porson is no edifying companion for young men of eighteen, nor are his letters on the text of the Three Heavenly Witnesses to be recommended, but that does not hinder his being admitted into Catholic schools, while he is confined within the limits of his Preface to the Iliad."

But surely the "limits" are rather restricted circumspecte!

"These Letters are generally considered, by critics of all parties, as finally decisive of a question which had often been agitated before, but never so learnedly argued nor so satisfactorily discussed in all its bearings"—THOMAS YOUNG, M.D. Memoir of Porson, Encyc. Brit.

See, also, Blackw. Mag., xxviii. 439, (by T. De Quincy.) Sir D. Brewster's Life of Sir I. Newton, ed. 1855, ii. 334. It appears by a late publication (Recollection, by S. Rogers, 1859, 116) that Porson wished to suppress these letters.

6. Articles in the Monthly Review, viz.: I., Jan., 1789, Robertson's Essay on the Parian Chronicle. In defence of the authenticity of that monument. Repub. in Tracts, xiii. II., July, 1793, Edwards's edit. of the work attributed to Plutarch on Education. Repub., Tracts, xxi. III., Jan. 1794, Payne Knight's Greek Alphabet. Repub., Tracts, xxiii. IV., Dec. 1800, Pybus's Sovereign. A piece displaying much humour.

7. Remarks on an Essay on the Transfiguration. Repub., Tracts, xv. Supposed to be Porson's, but never expressly acknowledged by him.

8. Notes to Virgil's Opera, Heyne, Lon., 1793, 4 vols. r. 8vo. To this republication of the Leipsic ed. of 1783 he added but a few short Notes. Porson agreed to correct the press; but he complained that his corrections were disregarded; and several hundred errors attest to a failing in some quarter.

9. Corrections to the Greek text of Æschylus, Pausanias ed., Hag. Com., 1745, for the Glasgow editions, the folio of 1795, and the two vols. 8vo, printed in 1794, but only pub. at London in 1806. The folio is said to have appeared surreptitiously. (See Mathias's Pursuits of Lit., ed. 1812, 141.) Of both folio and octavo edits. there are copies on large paper. Porson corrected more than 200 errors, and indicates other corrupt passages. See Lon. Mon. Rev., 1796, i. 120-36.

See strictures on ed. of 1797, in Monthly Review, 1799, i. 79, 192, 428, and ii. 311, 426, by an eminent Grecian, (see Edin. Rev., Nov. 1811, 65,) and a review of ed. of 1808, in Edin. Rev., Nov. 1811, 64, 96, by Peter Elmsley. Hermann's De Metris, Lips., 1796, and his ed. of the Hecuba, 1800, must be read with Porson's Preface. With the English prose, by T. W. C. Edwards, 1822, 8vo; with English Notes, by Rev J. R. Major, 1826, 8vo. Commended by Lit. Chron., Jan. 1827. With reference to Porson's Hecuba, see De Quincey's Philos. Writers, Bost., 1854, 81-82, Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 312, (by Rev. J. J. Blunt) II. Orestes, Lon., 1798, 1811, 1818, 8vo. With the English prose, by T. W. C. Edwards, 1824, 8vo. III. Phœnissæ, Lon., 1799, 1811, 8vo. With the English Prose, by T. W. C. Edwards, 1823, 8vo. IV. Medea, Cantab., 1801, 8vo, Lon., 1812, '17, 8vo. With the English prose, by T. W. C. Edwards, 1821, 8vo. I., II., III., IV. were pub. in 1 vol., 1802, 8vo, again, 1822, 8vo. Porson's enthusiasm for Euripides is proverbial.

"When asked why he had written so little, Porson replied, 'I doubt if I could produce any original work which would command the attention of posterity. I can be known only by my notes, and I am quite satisfied if three hundred years hence, it shall be said that "One Porson lived towards the close of the eighteenth century, who did a good deal for the text of Euripides."'"—Porsoniana: Rogers's Table-Talk.

13. Collation of the Harleian MS. of the Odyssey (with some short Notes, repub. in Class. Jour., ix) for the superb ed. of Homer, Oxon., 1800, 4 vols. sm. 4to. Impensis D.D. Buckingham et Grenville excusæ, Curis Th. Grenville, R. Porson, Randolph, Cleaver et Rogers. Ugo Foscolo says that the editors had done much to depreciate the merits of Wolf, nevertheless they had adopted all his readings. 25 copies were printed on large paper, with three engravings not in the other copies. Of these 25, 7 have been sold at different times for £552 10s.—about £80 each on an average.

14. British Critic, May, 1801, Review of Wakefield's Lucretius, appears to be principally by Porson.

15. Monthly Magazine, Dec. 1802, Letter signed by J. N. Dawes, on some Greek constructions.

"When Porson first met Perry after the fire in the house of the latter at Merton, he immediately inquired 'If any lives had been lost?' Perry replied, 'No.' 'Well,' said Porson, 'then I shall not complain, though I have lost the labours of my life.' His transcript of the Cambridge Photus, which was burnt in that fire, he afterwards replaced by patiently making a second transcript, but his numerous notes on Aristophanes, which had also been consumed, were irrecoverably gone."—Porsoniana: Rogers's Table-Talk.

Aristophanes, we need scarcely remind the reader, was one of Porson's choicest books. See Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ed. 1837, 1010; Mathias's Pursuits of Lit., ed. 1812, 144, n.

To Porson were long attributed Eloisa en Dishabille, 1794, 4to, 1801, imp. 8vo, (since claimed for John Matthews: see Moore's Life of Byron, vol. i.,) and The Devil's Walk, really the joint production of Coleridge and Southey. (See Blackw. Mag., xix. 136, and—by De Quincey—xxviii. 671; Notes and Queries, 1866, i. 197.)

Mr. De Quincey rates Porson's powers of humour very low:

"Porson's jeux-d'esprit in the newspapers of his day were all childish and dull beyond description"—Blackw. Mag., xxviii. 671.

He also finds great fault with Porson's Latinity:

"In fact, he wrote Latin of any kind—such Latin even as was framed on his own poor ideal—with singular want of freedom and facility"—Blackw. Mag., xxix. 777.

In this respect he, of course, places him below Reiske, Wolff, Sir Wm. Jones, Bishop Lowth, Taylor, (ed. of Demosthenes,) and Parr. These strictures on Porson occur in De Quincey's articles on Bentley and Parr, and were repub. in his Essays on Philosophical Writers, &c., Bost., 1854, 5, 81, 111, 237.

It must be candidly admitted that at Eton Porson was not the first Grecian:

"When Goodall, Head-Master, . . . was examined in 1818 before the Education Committee of the House of Commons respecting the alleged passing over of Porson in giving promotion to King's College, he at once declared that the celebrated Grecian was not by any means at the head of the Etomans of his day, and on being asked by me (as chairman) to name his superior, he at once said Lord Wellesley"—LORD BROUGHAM States of the Time of George III., ed. 1866, ii. 208-209.

How eminent he became in later life by his intense application, aided by a prodigious memory, we all know. No man ever spoke more modestly of his own merits than did Porson.

"He insisted that all men are born with abilities nearly equal 'Any one,' he would say, 'might become quite as good a critic as I am, if he would only take the trouble to make himself so. I have made myself what I am by intense labour. Sometimes, in order to impress a thing upon my memory, I have read it a dozen times, and transcribed it six.'"—Porsoniana: Rogers's Table-Talk.

"Porson was conscious of his own powers, and, though frank and good-humoured (even to a fault with the unlearned, he was unbending among those who assumed the title of scholars. It has been observed that he neither would give nor take praise, and when he was told that a person named had called him a giant in literature, he remarked that a man had no right to tell the height of that which he could not measure."—Creney's Memoirs of Eminent Etomans: Richard Porson, 1850, 466-471.

"Nothing came amiss to his memory," says Mr. Weston. "He would set a child right in his two-penny table-book, repeat the whole moral tale of the Dean of Budagos, a page of Athenæus on cups, or of Eustathius on Homer, even though he did every thing to impair his mental faculties."

See two wonderful instances of his memory recorded in Keddie's Cyc. of Lit. and Sci. Anecdotes, 1854, 126, 285. See, also, 22, 127, 265, 285, 286.

We quote some other opinions respecting Porson.

"Mr. Porson is a giant in literature, a prodigy in intellect, a critic whose mighty achievements leave imitation panting at a distance behind him, and whose stupendous powers strike down all the restless and aspiring suggestions of rivalry into silent admiration and passive awe."—DR. PARR Reply to Cramb.

But why put "Dr. Parr" after such bombast? Who does not recognize the "Brummagem Doctor"?

"Our first luminary in Greek learning, Mr. Porson"—DR. PARR: Lon. Gent. Mag., May, 1825, 387.

"I have been furnished with many opportunities of observing Porson, by a near inspection. He has been at my house several times, and once for an entire summer's day. Our intercourse would have been frequent but for three reasons. 1. His extreme irregularity and inattention to times and seasons, which did not at all comport with the methodical arrangements of my time and family. 2. His gross addiction to that lowest and least excusable of all sensualities, immoderate drinking, and, 3. The uninteresting insipidity of his society, as it is impossible to engage his mind on any topic of mutual inquiry, to procure his opinion on any author or on any passage of an author, or to elicit any conversation of any kind to compensate for the time and attendance of his company. And as for Homer, Virgil, and Horace, I never could hear of the least critical effort on them in his life. He is, in general, devoid of all human affections; but such as he has, are of a misanthropic quality; nor do I think that any man exists for whom his propensities rise to be lowest."

pitch of affection and esteem. He much resembles Proteus in Lycophron:

though, I believe, he has satirical verses in his treasury for Dr. Bellenden, as he calls him, (PARA,) and all his most intimate associates. But in his knowledge of the Greek Tragedies and Aristophanes, in his judgment of MSS, and in all that relates to the metrical properties of dramatic and lyric versification, with whatever is connected with this species of reading, none of his contemporaries must pretend to equal him. His grammatical knowledge also, and his acquaintance with the ancient Lexicographers and Etymologists, is most accurate and profound; and his intimacy with Shakespeare, B Jonson, and other dramatic writers, is probably unequalled. He is, in short, a most extraordinary person in every view, but unnamable; and has been debarred of a comprehensive intercourse with Greek and Roman authors by his excesses, which have made those acquirements impossible to him, from the want of that time which must necessarily be expended in laborious reading, and for which no genius can be made a substitute. No man has ever paid a more voluntary and respectful homage to his talents, at all times, both publicly and privately, in writings and conversation, than myself, and I will be content to forfeit the esteem and affection of all mankind whenever the least particle of envy and malignity is found to mingle itself with my opinions."—GILBERT WAKEFIELD Correspondence of Wakefield and Charles James Fox, Lon., 1813, pp. 99-101.

"In him criticism lost the most able, most expert, most accomplished support of her sceptre, learning, one of its greatest ornaments. His knowledge was far more extensive than was generally understood, or imagined, or believed. There are very few languages with which he had not some acquaintance. His discernment and acuteness in correcting what was corrupt, and explaining what was difficult and perplexed, were almost intuitive, and, in addition to all this, his taste was elegant and correct."—BLOZ, Sezagenarian

But every classical scholar asks, How does he compare with Bentley? On this theme something has already been cited, (see BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., p. 172, supra;) and the inquirer must examine the authorities to which we shall presently refer him. A few lines more, however, we may quote; and the first shall be from a memoir of Porson, by an acquaintance of his, published in the English Cyclopædia, Biography, iv, 1857, 939-942.

"Richard Porson was one of the profoundest Greek scholars and the greatest verbal critic that any age or country has produced. He possessed every quality which is necessary to the formation of a scholar,—a stupendous memory, unwearied application, great acuteness, strong sound sense, and a lively perception both of the beautiful and the ludicrous. Besides these qualifications, he enjoyed the rare faculty of conjecturing from the imperfect data of corrupt readings the very words of the author whose text he sought to restore, in this last particular we know of no one, with the single exception of Bentley, who can be named in comparison with him, and in some points we should not hesitate to place Porson before that great Aristarchus of criticism. It is a great mistake to suppose that Porson's reading was confined to the Greek poets, we doubt if there were any classical author whom he had not read, and we are confident that he was familiar with the whole mass of Greek literature. We have looked through the editions of Greek books that belonged to him, which are now in the hands of different individuals or in public libraries, and there is not one which does not bear some traces of his careful and critical perusal. He was, besides, an excellent French scholar, and was thoroughly acquainted with the French literature of the middle ages. His knowledge of English literature was immense, and so extraordinary was his memory that he could repeat whole pages, not only of poetry, but of prose, in the most accurate and beautiful manner. The greatest complaint that can be made against Porson is that with such vast capabilities he did so little. A very large sum was offered him for an edition of Aristophanes, but he would not undertake the work, which, in Dr. Raine's opinion, would not have occupied more than six months. The money was no temptation to him, and he was over-scrupulous in his notions of the duties of an editor, never fully satisfying himself, and conceiving that something was still wrong where no one but himself could discover any deficiency."

A learned friend, to whom, alas! we can no more appeal on questions of classical scholarship, favoured us with the following:

"I remain of the opinions, on Bentley's character for Greek scholarship, which I expressed many years ago, and to which you have referred in your Dictionary, (BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., p. 172, supra.) Porson I regard as standing next to him on the list of English Hellenists, and I concur in the main with the comparative judgment expressed of them by the Quarterly Reviewer whom you cite in the article on Bentley. But, if Bentley's time was partly wasted in paltry squabbles with his fellows, much of Porson's was lost in a less creditable way. In natural capacity he might have been Bentley's equal, but the latter had been a more laborious student, and had surveyed a wider field of criticism. Porson had the advantage of much ampler materials and numerous able collaborators. In England Bentley stood alone. So deplorably low was the standard of philology at that time, that the wits of the day assigned the palm to Boyle, in the famous controversy between him and Bentley. In Porson's time, the idea of Boyle as an antagonist to Bentley would have been universally scouted. Porson, I think, deserves all the credit which the Quarterly Reviewer gives him for accuracy, but he dwells very much on verbal criticism, and has left but little to attest his skill,—which is, however, as I have already said, in my opinion second only to that of Bentley among English scholars. I ought, however, to express these opinions with diffidence, for my classical studies, though not wholly abandoned, have been much interrupted for many years."—Edward Everett to S. Austin Allibone, Oct. 20, 1859.

Dr. Thomas Young, who knew Porson for the last twenty years of his life, in his memoir of his friend, in the Encyc. Brit., does not hesitate to pronounce him

"The greatest of the verbal critics and classical scholars of modern times."

Again:

"It may safely be conceded to common fame and to partial friendship that he was one of the greatest men, and the very greatest critic, of his own or of any other age. . . . It has indeed been asserted, and perhaps with truth, (Classical Journal, xxi,) that 'with things Porson appears to have possessed but a very inconsiderable acquaintance, and not a trace is to be found amidst his writings of that combination of universal encyclopaedical knowledge with language-learning which is so abundantly found in the Dissertation on Phalaris, and the countless pages of Scaliger, Salmasius, and Casaubon.' Certainly, however, neither Salmasius nor Casaubon, with all their learning, much less Scaliger, with all his industry and parade, nor even Bentley himself, with all his talent and acuteness, was at all comparable to Porson in his own department,—that is, as a sound, accurate, and refined Greek critic."

This is high praise, but here is something worth the whole of it

"There is one quality of the mind in which it may be confidently maintained that Mr. Porson had no superior—I mean, the most pure and inflexible love of truth. Under the influence of this principle, he was cautious and patient and persevering in his researches, and scrupulously accurate in stating facts as he found them. All who were intimate with him bear witness to this noble part of his character, and his works confirm the testimony of his friends."—REV. THOMAS TURTON, in his Vindication of the Literary Character of the Late Professor Porson, &c., by Crito Cantabrigiensis, 1827, 8vo.

The handwriting of Porson was very beautiful, and Greek type was cut at Cambridge in imitation of the letters of his Greek notes. This is the well-known "Porsonian type," which has been used in England and in this country for the production of some exquisitely-printed Greek books. We have had engraved for this article a fac-simile of some of his corrections on one of the fly-leaves of a copy of the first edition of his Medea, formerly in the library of the Duke of Sussex, now (1869) in the possession of our esteemed friend Charles Short, LL.D., Professor of Latin in Columbia College, New York,—one of the ripest classical scholars of the present day.

Porter, David, 1780-1843, Commodore U. States Navy, after gaining distinction in the service, resigned his commission in consequence of difficulties with his Government, and entered the Mexican navy. Of this journal there appeared what Rich calls "Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 79" "a most outrageous attack" in the Lon. Quar. Rev., xiii. 352-383, but the extracts given from the book are not calculated to make a very good impression on a critic. Lowndes (Bibl. Man., 1845) calls it a "fallacious work," but John Neal (Blackw. Mag., xvii. 200) styles it "a foolish, pompous, ridiculous, true book." It was also reviewed in the N. Amer. Porter, Miss Jane, 1776–1850, a native of Durham, was the elder sister of Anna Maria Porter, (supra), which see for notices of the family and references to authorities. In 1842 she visited St. Petersburg, and with her brother, Sir Robert Ker Porter, was on the point of returning home to England, when her departure was delayed by Sir R. K. Porter's sudden decease.

For some years before her death, Miss Porter resided with her brother, William Ogilvie Porter, M.D., of Bristol. She published 1. Thaddeus of Warsaw; a Novel, Lon., 1803, 4 vols. 12mo; 9th ed., 1810, 4 vols. 12mo, and many eds. since, illust. ed., 1840, 8vo., last British ed., Lon., 1860, 12mo, 1868, cr. 8vo. Trans. into several foreign languages. Commended by Crit. Rev., Imper. Rev., Month. Rev., Anti-Jac. As an evidence of his appreciation of this work, Kosciusko sent Miss Porter a complimentary letter, and a relation of his presented her with a gold ring containing a portrait of the great general. The authoress was also elected a lady chanoin-ness of the Teutonic Order of St. Joachim, in the habit of which she appears in some of her portraits. 2. Aphorisms of Sir Philip Sidney; with Remarks, 1807, (some 1898), 2 vols. 12mo. Sir Walter Scott admitted (conversation with George IV. in the library of Carlton Palace) that this work suggested his Waverley Novels.

"Wallace, in 'The Scottish Chiefs,'—which, through a rich variety of interesting imaginary adventures, conducts a character of most perfect virtue and heroism to an affecting and tragical end,—is a romance deservedly popular."—JOANNA BAILLIE
"She has, however, added attributes which neither pertained to the times nor to the hero. . . . She has drawn him with a hand much too soft and gentle."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years

4. The Pastor's Fireside; a Novel, 1815, 3 vols. 12mo; many eds., illust. ed., 1840, 8vo; last British ed., 1857, 12mo. See MOORE, GEORGE, No. 3. 5. Duke Christian of Luneburgh, or, Travels through the Hartz, 1824, 3 vols. 12mo. Written in consequence of "his Majesty's (George IV.) gracious request that Miss Porter's next subject should be the Life of his great and virtuous progenitor, Duke Christian of Luneburgh."

The original documents were furnished by the king, (who declared that the work "had been completed to his fullest wishes,") and the Duke of Clarence (afterwards William IV.) took a lively interest in the progress of the narrative.

6. Houtercombe, in Tales round a Winter's Hearth, 1826, 2 vols. 8vo. see PORTER, MISS ANNA MARIA, No. 15. 7. The Field of Forty Footsteps, 1828, 2 vols. 12mo. This story, founded on a tradition connected with the ground near the London University, was dramatized. See PORTER, MISS ANNA MARIA, No. 17. 8. Sir Edward Seaward's Narrative of his Shipwreck and Consequent Discovery of certain Islands in the Caribbean Sea; with a Detail of many extraordinary and highly interesting Events in his Life, from the Years 1733 to 1749, as written in his own Diary, edited by Miss Jane Porter, Lon. and N. York, 1831, 3 vols. 12mo, 2d ed., 1832, 3 vols. 12mo, new ed., 1841, 2 vols. p. 8vo. This clever fiction was as successful as De Foe's Voyage to the World of Cartesius (p. 490, supra) and Sir Thomas More's Utopia, (p. 1362, supra). After elaborate researches among Admiralty records, Indian maps, &c., a critic in the London Quarterly Review gravely informs his readers,

"We are compelled to state that, notwithstanding its solemn and almost sacred character, it is neither more nor less than pure unmingled fiction from first to last"—Dec 1832, 480-507

Its literary ability the reviewer commends. The Monthly Reviewer (July, 1831, 354-377) was for a time deceived, but he retained his admiration of the storyteller after he had parted with his faith in the story. The Eclectic Review, the New Monthly Magazine, and the Spectator are also among the eulogists of the Narrative.

"At the merciless rummaging of Admiralty records and Indian maps, made by her critic, Miss Porter was more flattered than annoyed. When pressed to the real origin of 'Sir Edmund Seaward,' she would quietly say, 'Sir Walter Scott had his great secret, I must be allowed to keep my little one.'"—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1850, ii. 222.

In 1819 a tragedy by this lady, called Switzerland, in which Charles Kean played the principal part, was condemned at the Drury Lane Theatre (see Blackw. Mag., iv. 714.)

In early life, in conjunction with Dr. T. F. Dibdin, Anna Maria and Robert Porter, she wrote for the Quiz, a weekly magazine, (see Prior's Life of Goldsmith, ii. 89-94, Dibdin's Reminiscences, 175;) she contributed the Life of Colonel Denham (p. 492, ante) to the Naval and Military Journal; the Life of Rev. Percival Stockdale (see Gent. Mag., 1850, ii. 364) to Gent. Mag., Oct. 1811, 384-390; and wrote for other periodicals. In America her works have had a wide circulation (uniform edit. pub. by Derby & Jackson, New York, 1857, &c.,) and in 1844 a number of the booksellers, publishers, and authors of the United States sent from New York to Miss Porter a handsome rosewood arm-chair, as a "memorial of high and respectful admiration" for the author of "some of the purest and most imaginative productions in the wide range of English literature." (See Gent. Mag., 1845, i. 173.) In addition to authorities already referred to, see Fraser's Mag., xi. 404, (with portrait,) Lon. Critic, July, 1859, and N. York Internat. Mag., i. 10, 201.

"It is to Miss Porter's fame that she began the system of historical novel-writing which attained the climax of its renown in the hands of Sir Walter Scott. And no light praise it is that she has thus pioneered the way for the greatest exhibition of the greatest genius of our time. She may parody Bishop Hall, and tell Sir Walter,

"I first adventured—follow me who list,
And be the second Scottish novelist."

Porter, Sir Robert Ker, Knt, K.C.H., b. at Durham, 1780, d. suddenly at St Petersburg, 1842, has already been briefly noticed in our sketches of his sisters, Anna Maria and Jane Porter, (ante.) About 1790 he became a student of the Royal Academy, under the auspices of Benjamin West: in 1792 commenced his picture of Moses and Aaron for Shoreditch Church; in 1794 presented an altar-piece of Christ allaying the Storm to the Roman Catholic Chapel at Portsea, and in 1798 another, of St John Preaching in the Wilderness, to St John's College, Cambridge. He subsequently gained distinction by a number of great paintings,—among which were the battle-pieces of The Storming of Seringapatam, (exhibited A.D. 1800,) The Siege of Acre, (with a printed Companion, 1801, 8vo,) Agincourt, The Battle of Alexandria, and The Death of Sir Ralph Abercromby. In 1804 he visited Russia, and was appointed historical painter to the emperor, and gained the affections of the Princess Mary de Sherbatoff, whom he married in 1811, and who survived him. In 1808 he accompanied Sir John Moore's expedition to the Peninsula, and attended the campaign throughout to its melancholy termination at the battle of Corunna. From 1817 to 1820 he was engaged in his travels through the East; in 1819 was created a Knight of the Lion and Sun of Persia, and in 1832 Knight Commander of the Order of Hanover; from 1826 to 1841 was British Consul at Venezuela, residing at Caracas, (where he painted his Christ at the Last Supper, Our Saviour Blessing the Little Child, and Ecce Homo,) on May 3d, 1842, wrote from St. Petersburg of his intended visit to England, and on the next day died of apoplexy, after a parting visit to the emperor.

"Distinguished alike in the arts, in diplomacy, in war, and in literature, his loss will be regretted by the extended circle who appreciated his agreeable manners and extensive information"—Lon. Gent. Mag., July, 1842, 99, (Obituary), q. v.

See, also, Oct. 1850, 364; Lon. Athen., 1842, 479, Memoirs of Miss Jane Porter, by Mrs S. C. Hall, in Art Journal, 1850.

Sir Robert published the following works: 1. Traveling Sketches in Russia and Sweden during the Years 1805, '06, '07, and '08, Lon., 1809, 2 vols. 4to, £5 5s.

"We are now to make our readers acquainted with Mr. Ker Porter. He has long been known, we presume, to most of them, as a very ingenious artist in this book he does not increase, nor indeed sustain, that reputation, nor does he add to it any considerable portion of literary fame, although he entitles himself to the much higher praise of amiable feelings."—LORD BROUGHAM Edin. Rev., April, 1809, 170-187.

"On the whole, we dismiss Mr P's travels as a book which will seldom find a place in a library, but may lie without offence on a table, which, if not the best, is far from the worst, account of one of the most interesting countries in the world."—BISHOP HENR Lon. Quar. Rev., Nov 1809, 288-301

2. Letters from Portugal and Spain, &c., 1809, 8vo. Anon. 3. Narrative of the Campaign in Russia in 1812, 4to, 1813, 1814; 8vo, 1815. Contains valuable official documents.

"The circumstances are related in this volume from authority which cannot be disputed. It will be perused by all with an eager and an anxious interest."—British Critic, Aug 1813

4. Travels in Georgia, Persia, Armenia, Ancient Babylon, &c., 1817, '18, '19, and '20, 2 vols. 4to, 1821-22, £9 9s. Vol. i. was reviewed in Month. Rev., xvi. 1, and in Quar. Rev., xxvi. 437, vol. ii. in Month. Rev., c. 1, 136; both vols. in Blackw. Mag., xvi. 140. See, also, Phila. Museum, xi. 17; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 430; Lon. Athen., 1850, 731.

"The manners of the people and the face of the country through which he travelled are almost all that he attempts to describe, and even this he but indifferently executes"—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxvi. 437

"Few people have leisure to read so much about so little as we have here served up for our entertainment"—Blackw. Mag., xvi. 140

"Were we inclined to season our commendation with any rebuke, we should condemn the inflated style of Sir Robert Porter, a fault which was strikingly conspicuous in his former Travels through Russia and Sweden"—Lon. Month. Rev., xvi. 15 review of vol. i. The same fault is found (Ibid., c. 1, 2) with vol. ii

"The narrative is executed in a pleasing and lively style; and these volumes form, on the whole, a valuable addition to our stock of knowledge of the countries described"—DIBDIN ut supra.

Potter, Alonzo, D.D., LL.D., the son of a Revolutionary soldier, who was also a member of the New York Legislature, was b. in Dutchess county, N York, July 10, 1800; graduated with first honours at Union College, Schenectady, 1818, and became tutor in the same institution the following year, ordained deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church, 1822, and Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Union College, 1822-26; declined the presidency of Geneva College, 1825, the Assistant Bishopric of Massachusetts, 1838, and from time to time refused other overtures of pastoral care and episcopal jurisdiction; Rector of St. Paul's Church, Boston, 1826-31, Vice-President of, and Professor of Moral Philosophy in, Union College, 1831-45; Bishop of the Prot. Epis. Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania from Sept. 23, 1845, until his death, at San Francisco, California, on a visit for his health, July 4, 1865. He was buried at Laurel Hill, near Philadelphia, Aug. 11, 1865. Bishop Potter enjoyed a wide and well-deserved reputation for personal virtues, a remarkable range of erudition, and untiring zeal in the active duties of philanthropy,—alike evinced in the professional chair, the pastoral pulpit, and the discharge of the arduous responsibilities connected with a large and thriving episcopate. Author of: 1. Treatise on Logarithms. 2. Treatise on Descriptive Geometry. Both printed (we think never published) for the use of his classes when Prof. of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Union College, (1822-26.) 3. Political Economy: its Objects, Uses, and Principles, N York, 1840, 18mo; 1841, 18mo; 1844, 18mo. Potter, Chandler E., b. at Concord, N. Hampshire, 1807; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1831; Principal of the Portsmouth (N.H.) High School, 1832-38; admitted to the Bar, 1842; Judge of the Police Court of Manchester, (N.H.) 1848; d. at Flint, Michigan, 1888. Judge Potter is the author of the History of Manchester, New Hampshire, 1856, 8vo, pp. 764, ("of extraordinary interest," N. Amer. Rev., lxxiv. 266,) of Two Addresses upon the Penobscot Indians, and other Addresses, of agricultural, historical, and other papers in periodicals; and edited The Manchester Democrat, 1844-48, and The Farmer's Monthly Visitor, 1852-53, and was connected with The Granite Farmer and Visitor. He contributed the article upon the Penobscot and other Eastern Indians to Schoolcraft's History of the Indians, and partially prepared for publication a new edition of Belknap's History of New Hampshire, with Notes, and a Continuation to 1860. He was President of the New Hampshire Historical Society.

Potter, Francis, 1594-1678, a native of Meyre, Wiltshire, educated at Trinity College, Oxford, Rector et Kilmington, 1637; was a man of learning and mechanical ingenuity. An Interpretation of the Number 666, &c., Oxon., 1642, 4to. Idem, Latine, Amst., 1677, 8vo. Trans. by Thomas Gilbert and others. Also trans. into French and Dutch. It was attacked by Rev. Lambert Morehouse, to whom Potter wrote a Reply: neither of these pieces was ever published. A great authority thus commends Potter's Interpretation:

"This discourse of the Number of the Beast is the happiest that ever yet came into the world, and such as cannot be read (save of those that perhaps will not believe it) without much admiration."—JOSEPH MEKE.

Bat.) of the latter. An incorrect Latin ed. was pub. in Holland, (see Potter's Pref. to 5th English ed.) In English, 2d ed., 1703, 2 vols. 8vo, 5th ed., 1740, 2 vols. 8vo; 9th ed., 1775, 2 vols. 8vo. Last ed.: With Life of the Author by R. Anderson, M.D., and Appendix by George Dunbar, Edin., 2 vols. 8vo, 1818, again, 1820, again, 1832; 1st Amer. ed., with Additions and Corrections by C. Anthon, N. York, 1825, 8vo. With Notes and Indices by James Boyd, LL.D., with a Sketch of the Literature of Greece by Sir D. K. Sandford, 150 Illust., Edin., 12mo, 1842; again, 1850, fp. 8vo. See BOYD, JAMES.

"The warm eulogies of Gronovius attest the merit of this celebrated work. Potter was but twenty-three years of age, he had of course availed himself of the writings of Meursius, but he has also contrived to supersede them. It has been said that he is less exact in attending to the difference of times and places than our finer criticism requires."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 254

A new book, based on Potter's, incorporating in the text the results of late German criticism, is to be desired; but the 5 vols. which compose Dr. Smith's admirable Dictionaries (see SMITH, WILLIAM, LL.D.) should be in every library of any pretensions. Smith's abridged Dictionary of Antiquities, pub. in 1851, is intended especially for schools.

Potter, Robert, 1721–1804, educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, was first appointed Vicar of Searning, Prob. of Norwich in 1788; and Vicar of Lowestoft and Kessingland in 1789. 1. Poems, 1774, 8vo. 2. Observations on the Poor-Laws, &c., 1775, 8vo. 3. The Tragedies of Æschylus, trans., Lon., 1777, 4to; Notes, 1778, 4to; 2d ed., corrected, with the Notes, 1779, 2 vols. 8vo; again, Oxf., 1808, 8vo, Lon., 1809, 8vo, 1812, 8vo 1831, 12mo; 1833, 12mo; N. York, 1834, 18mo. This translation has been much praised. Mr. John Symmons, however, in the Preface to his trans. of the Agamemnon, 1824, 8vo, disputes the popular verdict, and Prof. Wilson, in Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1831, 359 et seq., (repub. in Wilson's Works, vol. viii., 1857, 407 et seq.,—Greek Drama), endorses Symmons's dissent, though not without awarding Potter great merit. See, also, Lon. Month. Rev., cvi. 120, 228. Mr. Harris thought Potter's Æschylus "very pretty;" Dr. Johnson characterised what little he had read of it as "verbiage," (see Boswell, by Croker, ed. 1848, 582;) and Sir James Mackintosh (see his Life, vol. 1 chap. v.) read it with "very great admiration." Power, Robert. Miscellaneous Poems, Lon., 3 vols. p. 8vo.

Power, Thomas. Masonic Melodies, Bost., 1844, 8vo.

Power, Tyrone, 1795-1841, according to one version, was the son of an Irish gentleman, of the county of Waterford, and whilst still an infant was taken by his widowed mother to her new residence at Glamorganshire, South Wales.

According to another version,

"In point of fact, Power was a native of Swansea, in Wales, where he served his apprenticeship to the printing-business, and did newspaper work in England as a journeyman compositor before he went on the stage. As a printer, his name was Thomas Powell, which he converted to Tyrone Power after he had been for some time on the stage at Newcastle-upon-Tyne"—Amer. Lit. Gaz., Nov 15, 1866, 49

At the town of Cardiff, a short distance from his home, young Power found a theatre, and soon "trod the boards" in the character of Romeo, "time out of mind" the débutant's favourite "first character." After some experience in tragedy, he threw away the dagger and became famous in Irish comedy,—to suit which he manufactured an admirable brogue,—inferior, indeed, to "Irish Johnstone's," which was genuine, but good enough to pass for original. In 1818 he retired from the stage, but returned in 1821; became manager of the Olympic Theatre in 1823, and appeared with no success at Drury Lane in the same year; in 1824 achieved a triumph as Paddy O'Halloran, and henceforth devoted himself to Irish characters; travelled in America in 1833, '34, and '35, and pub. his Impressions of America in 2 vols. 8vo in 1836, (repub. in Phila. in same year, 2 vols. 12mo, and commended by Lon. Month. Rev., 1836, 1. 297,) made a second tour through the United States in 1840, and sailed from New York for England, March 11, 1841, on board the steamship "President" neither the vessel nor any of the 123 souls on board were ever heard of from that day. Mr. Power also pub. two novels,—The King's Secret, 3 vols. p. 8vo, and Cauth Malowney, or the Last Heir, 3 vols. p. 8vo, new ed., 1858, 12mo. See, also, PICKEN, ANDREW, No. 5, Atlantic Monthly, Jan 1860.

Praed, Winthrop Mackworth, 1802–1839, a native of London, son of Mr. Serjeant Praed, educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he gained distinction both as a scholar and as an orator; took his degree of B.A., 1825; was called to the Bar, 1829; returned to Parliament for St. Germans, 1830 and 1831; unsuccessfully contested St. Ives with Mr. Halse, in 1832; returned for Great Yarmouth, 1835, and in the same year was married to Miss Helen Bogle, Secretary to the Board of Control, Dec. 1834–April, 1835, subsequently M.P. for Aylesbury, Recorder of Barnstaple, and Deputy High Steward for the University of Cambridge. As a parliamentary speaker he was chiefly noted for his opposition to the Reform Bill. Praed's contributions to the Etonian have been referred to on a preceding page (See MOUTRIE, JOHN.) He was also one of the chief contributors in prose and poetry to his friend Charles Knight's Quarterly Magazine, and published largely in the New Monthly and the Annals. In 1844 the Rev. R. W. Griswold pub. at New York a volume of Praed's poems; and an enlarged edition (Lillian, and other Poems, 12mo) in 1850, reprinted, 1 vol. 12mo, 1852, '53, '55, '56. The fourth American edition, edited, with a Memoir, by W. H. Whitmore, was issued (also N. York, by Redfield) in 1859, 2 vols. 12mo. A notice of this edition, (which contains many of Fitzgerald's poems, mistaken for Praed's,) written by the editor, will be found in the North American Review for October, 1859, 536–546. At last the long-promised complete edition of his Poetical Works, containing many of his juvenile pieces, contributed by his sister, Lady Young, prefaced by a Memoir by the Rev. Derwent Coleridge, late Principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, was published by Moxon, Lon., Aug. 23, 1864, 2 vols. fp. 8vo, 14s., or 8vo, 24s., 2d ed., Nov. 1, 1864. 3d ed., 1869: (Selection from the Works of, edited by Sir G. Young, 1866, 16mo.) republished, N. York, Redfield, Nov. 1, 1864, 2 vols. or 8vo, some 1 p., 2d ed., June, 1865, 2 vols. blue and gold. See Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 284; Chris. Exam., Nov. 1864, Alexandrian Mag., Dec. 1864, (by Miss B. R. Parkes);—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1865, Art. IV., Brit. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1866, Art. II.; A Selection from the Works of W. M. Mag.*, i. 230, 369–372, 523, v. 420, Home Journal, (Recollections of Praed, by N. P. Willis: also in the last edition of his poems.) Among the best-known of Praed's poems are Lillian, The Troubadour, School and School Fellows, Palm-nodia, The Vicar, Josephine, Arminius, The Red Fisherman, The Bridal of Belmont, Memory, The Belle of the Ball, Time's Changes, Gog, The Legend of the Drachenfels, The Legend of the Teufel-Haus, The Bachelor, Quince, My Partner, Sir Hilary, and other charades. Miss Mitford cannot say enough in commendation of Praed's pieces:

"That these poems are the most graceful and finished verses of society that can be found in our language, it is impossible to doubt."—Recollec. of a Lit. Life

Mr. Whitmore has provided his admiration of the poet by the pains devoted to his editorial labours, (ut supra.)

"In conclusion," he remarks, p. 546, "we may say that, while few poets have written purer verse than he, few satirists have done their task with more gentleness."

"Praed's fancy was airy, bright, and arabesque. It enabled him, with his easy command of poetical expression, to produce picturesque sketches with equal grace and facility. . . . His prose is almost as quaintly and pensively playful as his verse. We have little doubt that if his correspondence were selected from, it would display all those qualities that sparkle so gracefully in his published pieces."—Lon. Athen., 1852, 908, 910.

Prentice, George Denison, b. Dec. 18, 1802, at Preston, New London; graduated at Brown University, 1823, and subsequently studied law. The editorial desk presenting greater attractions than the Bar, Mr. Prentice in 1828 commenced the New England Weekly Review, which he published at Hartford for two years, resigning it to his fellow-poet, Mr. J. G. Whittier. In 1831 Mr. Prentice became connected with the paper which he has since made so famous,—the Louisville (Daily) Journal. From his editorial chair, which he has now occupied (we write in 1869) for thirty-eight years, Mr. Prentice has kept up an energetic and brilliant warfare against his political opponents. It was well remarked, in a recent publication,

"The 'Prenticeana' of the editor are famous. If collected and published, with appropriate notes, these notes would form an amusing and instructive commentary on the management of elections, newspaper literature, and political oratory, of permanent value as a memorial of the times."—Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, ii. 400.

This hint has not been lost: a collection of Prenticeana, or Wit and Humour in Paragraphs, in 1 volume 12mo, was pub. in New York in 1859. The announcement of this work in London led to an amusing blunder on the part of the London Bookseller, a monthly organ of the publishers:

"We observe," remarks the editor of this periodical, "a book announced on an almost forgotten subject, 'Prenticeana.' Mrs. Ellis may be reminded by this that the 'prentices of England have never yet been the subject of a history'"

See Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1860, and N. Brit. Rev., Nov. 1860, Art. VII.: American Humour, (by Gerald Massey.) The volume found little favour in the eyes of the Lon. Athen. and Lon. Leader, 1860.

We are informed that Mr. Prentice will follow up this volume by a collection of his poetical contributions—which have been numerous—to the periodicals. Specimens of these, with notices of their popular author, will be found in Everett's Poets of Connecticut; Gallagher's Selections from the Poetical Literature of the West, Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America; Duyckinck's Cyclopædia of American Literature; Coppée's Gallery of Famous English and American Poets, Cleveland's Compendium of American Literature, and Coggeshall's Poets and Poetry of the West. See, also, Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, ed. 1859, lix. Among Mr. Prentice's best-known poems are: The Flight of Years; The Closing Year; To a Lady; Sabbath Evening; The Dead Mariner; Written at my Mother's Grave; To My Wife. But (like the "twofold operation of the good sherris-sack") Mr. Prentice is not only poetical himself, but he is the cause of poetry, as well as of wit, in others: some of the best female writers in the West (the lamented "Amelia" Welby was one of the most popular) have owed their first introduction to the public to the columns of the Louisville Journal. We have already noticed (vide p. 394, supra) Mr. Prentice's biographical sketch of his friend of many years, Henry Clay. (See N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1831, 351-396, by Alex. H. Everett.)

Prescott, William Hickling, May 4, 1796-Jan. 28, 1859, a son of the late Judge William Prescott, of Boston, and a grandson of Colonel William Prescott, who commanded at Bunker Hill, June 17, 1775, first saw the light at Salem, Massachusetts, where his father resided between 1789 and 1808. In the latter year Judge Prescott removed to Boston, and William became a scholar of Dr. Gardiner, who had himself been disciplined by the famous pedagogue who lit his torch at Bellenden's beathen altar, bearing the inscription De Tribus Luminibus Romanorum. In 1811 young Prescott entered Harvard College,—where his classical predilections and attainments would have elicited the commendation of his literary grandsire, Dr. Parr, himself,—graduated with distinguished honour in 1814, and would at once have devoted himself, under the brightest auspices, to the profession adorned by the learning and reputation of his father, but for the results of one of those thoughtless acts of mischievous folly the effects of which so often punish the transgressor and his victim, and sometimes embitter the remaining years of a long life. At a college dinner in his Junior year, an under-graduate threw at random a large, hard piece of bread, which struck one of Prescott's eyes, and, for all useful purposes, closed it forever on the world. His other eye was soon sympathetically affected; and the youthful student, to whom life had but yesterday seemed so bright and hope-inspiring, was now obliged to turn his back upon the sun and all that it gladdens, and, at a later period, for many weary months to submit to the imprisonment of a darkened room.

Thus early tried in the furnace of affliction, he was not found unequal to his probation. "In all that trying season," said his mother, "I never groped my way across the apartment to take my place by his side, that he did not greet me with some hearty expression of good cheer, as if we were the patients and it were his place to comfort us."

In the autumn of 1815 he visited Europe, and passed two years in England, France, and Italy, in seeking and gaining instruction both from books and men, and delighting not the less in the charms of nature because by him they could be seen only "as through a glass, darkly." For this infirmity of vision, indeed, he found no cure; but he returned to his home more in love than ever with the great deeds and great thoughts of the men of renown of the older days, and with a resolute determination that the "ample page of knowledge, rich with the spoils of time," if obscured to his external organs, should be no stranger to his intellectual vision. But no one can tell the story so well as it was related by the student himself, in a letter, written eighteen months before his death, to the Rev. George E. Ellis, and by this gentleman published in the Massachusetts Teacher for July, 1857:

"I suppose you are aware that when in college I received a injury in one eye, which deprived me of the use of it for reading and writing. An injudicious use of the other eye, on which the burden of my studies was now wholly thrown, brought on a rheumatic inflammation, which deprived me entirely of sight for some weeks. When this was restored, the eye remained in so irritable a state to be employed in reading for several years. I consequently abandoned the study of the law, upon which I had entered; and, as a man must find something to do, I determined to devote myself to letters, in which independent career I could regulate my own hours with reference to what my sight might enable me to accomplish.

"I had early conceived a strong passion for historical writing, to which, perhaps, the reading of Gibbon's autobiography contributed not a little. I proposed to make myself a historian in the best sense of the term, and hoped to produce something which posterity would not willingly let die. In a memorandum-book, as far back as the year 1819, I find the desire intimated, and I proposed to devote ten years of my life to the study of ancient and modern literatures,—chiefly the latter,—and to give ten years more to some historical work. I have had the good fortune to accomplish this design pretty nearly within the limits assigned. In the Christmas of 1837 my first work, the History of Ferdinand and Isabella, was given to the public.

"During my preliminary studies in the field of general literature, my eyes gradually acquired so much strength that I was enabled to use them many hours of the day. The result of my studies at this time I was in the habit of giving, in the form of essays, in public journals,—chiefly in the North American,—from which a number, quite large enough, have been transferred to a separate volume of Miscellanies. Having settled on a subject for a particular history, I lost no time in collecting the materials, for which I had peculiar advantages. But, just before these materials arrived, my eye had experienced so severe a strain that I enjoyed no use of it again, for reading, for several years. It has, indeed, never since fully recovered its strength, nor have I ever ventured to use it again by candlelight. I well remember the blank despair which I felt when my literary treasures arrived from Spain, and I saw the mine of wealth lying around me, which I was forbidden to explore. I determined to see what could be done with the eyes of another. I remembered that Johnson had said, in reference to Milton, that the great poet had abandoned his projected History of England, finding it scarcely possible for a man without eyes to pursue a historical work requiring reference to various authorities. The remark plucked me to make an attempt.

"I obtained the services of a reader who knew no language but his own. I taught him to pronounce the Castilian in a manner suited, I suspect, much more to my ear than to that of a Spaniard, and we began our wearisome journey through Mariana's noble history. I cannot even now call to mind without a smile the tedious hours in which, seated under some old trees in my country residence, we pursued our slow and melancholy way over pages which afforded no glimmering of light to him, and from which the light came dimly struggling to me through a half-intelligible vocabulary. But in a few weeks the light became stronger, and I was cheered by the consciousness of my own improvement, and when we had toiled our way through seven quartos, I found I could understand the book when read about two-thirds as fast as ordinary English. My reader's office required the more patience: he had not even this result to cheer him in his labour.

"I now felt that the great difficulty could be overcome; and I obtained the services of a reader whose acquaintance with modern and ancient tongues supplied, as far as it could be supplied, the deficiency of eyesight on my part. But, though in this way I could examine various authorities, it was not easy to arrange in my mind the results of my reading, drawn from different and often contradictory accounts. To do this I dictated copious notes as I went along, and, when I had read enough for a chapter,—from thirty to forty, and sometimes fifty, pages in length,—I had a mass of memoranda in my own language, which would easily bring before me at one view the fruits of my researches. These notes were carefully read to me; and while my recent studies were fresh in my recollection I ran over the whole of my intended chapter in my mind. This process I repeated at least half a dozen times, so that when I finally put my pen to paper it ran off pretty glibly, for it was an effort of memory rather than creation. This method had the advantage of saving me from the perplexity of frequently referring to the scattered passages in the originals, and it enabled me to make the corrections in my own mind which are usually made in the manuscript, and which with my mode of writing—as I shall explain—would have much embarrassed me. Yet I must admit that this method of composition, when the chapter was very long, was somewhat too heavy a strain on the memory to be altogether recommended.

"Writing presented me a difficulty even greater than reading. Thierry, the famous blind historian of the Norman Conquest, advised me to cultivate dictation; but I have usually preferred a substitute that I found in a writing-case made for the blind, which I procured in London forty years since. It is a simple apparatus, often described by me for the benefit of persons whose vision is imperfect. It consists of a frame of the size of a sheet of paper, traversed by brass wires as many as lines are wanted on the page, and with a sheet of carbonated paper, such as is used for getting duplicates, pasted on the reverse side. With an ivory or agate stylus the writer traces his characters between the wires on the carbonated sheet, making indelible marks, which he cannot see, on the white page below. This treadmill operation has its defects; and I have repeatedly supposed I had accomplished a good page, and was proceeding in all the glow of composition to go ahead, when I found I had forgotten to insert a sheet of my writing-paper below, that my labour had all been thrown away, and that the leaf looked as blank as myself. Notwithstanding these and other whimsical distresses of the kind, I have found my writing-case my best friend in my lonely hours, and with it have written nearly all that I have sent into the world the last forty years.

"The manuscript thus written, and deciphered—for it was in the nature of hieroglyphics—by my secretary, was then read to me for corrections, and copied off in a fair hand for the printer. All this, it may be thought, was rather a slow process, requiring the virtue of patience in all the parties concerned. But in time my eyes improved again. Before I had finished Ferdinand and Isabella, I could use them some hours every day. And thus they have continued till within a few years, though subject to occasional interruptions, sometimes of weeks, and sometimes of months, when I could not look at a book. And this circumstance, as well as habit,—second nature,—has led me to adhere still to my early method of composition. Of late years I have suffered, not so much from inability of the eye, as dimness of the vision, and the warning comes that the time is not far distant when I must rely exclusively on the eyes of another for the prosecution of my studies. Perhaps it should be received as a warning that it is time to close them altogether."

See, also, Ferdinand and Isabella, i, Pref., ix, 11; Mexico, i, Pref., xiv; Peru, i, Pref., xiv-xx, Miscellanies, ed. 1855, 59-63; Philip II, i, Pref., xvi.

Thus, as we have seen, after many years of conscientious labour, Mr. Prescott had the gratification of presenting to his father and a few chosen literary advisers—among whom were the eminent scholars George Ticknor and Jared Sparks—the results of his "long night of toil." This "audience, fit though few," he thought not of enlarging. "I have had the gratification of writing the work," he remarked to his father, "and shall place it on my library-shelf for those who come after me." But in Judge Prescott's case, fortunately for the world, the heart of the father and the head of the scholar were united, and to the proposed entombment of so much lore of wisdom and of beauty he would by no means consent. He appealed, however, not to the claims of literary ambition, but used an argument well suited to the grandson of the grim chieftain of Bunker Hill,—him for whom Colonel Willard made the memorable endorsement to General Gage, and whom the great Washington delighted to call "Prescott the brave." "The man who writes a book which he is afraid to publish," said Judge Prescott to his son, "is a coward." Now, it was never known that a Prescott was "a coward," and it was not for the first author of the family to obscure the family laurels.

Mr. Sparks's advice on this point shall be given in his own words:

"It is known that Mr. Prescott's eyesight was then so feeble that it was difficult for him to read, and, for the purpose of carefully preparing the composition of his work, he had it printed in large type, in quarto form, so that he could read it and correct it for the press, instead of revising it in manuscript. After it was finished, he sent me his two volumes, printed as I have described, and requested me to read them. I did so, of course, with very great pleasure and profit, and with no little surprise at the success of the writer, under his infirmity of sight, in accomplishing the work in so thorough and finished a manner. I returned the volumes, and soon after saw Mr. Prescott. He asked me, with a good deal of diffidence, what I thought of the book. I told him there could be but one opinion about it, that I had read the book with great delight, and thought he had written one of the most successful works of his kind that had come before the public. 'But perhaps,' said he, 'you have read it under the bias of some degree of partiality and friendly feeling.' I told him I could not say as to that, but I had been exceedingly gratified with the perusal of the book. He then asked, 'Do you think it should be published?' 'To be sure,' I replied, 'have you not written it to be published?' He still expressed doubts, and enumerated objections. In the first place, the subject was not one likely to interest American readers; it related to Spain, and times long past. In the next place, he doubted very much whether the composition and execution of the work were of such a character as would make it attractive. His opinion was, in short, that it would not succeed. Of course I used what arguments I could, and told him that no impression of that sort could be entertained by any mind but his own. I left him, however, in that state of uncertainty. Mr. Gray has explained how he was induced to publish the work at last. The anecdote is characteristic of Mr. Prescott, and illustrates his modesty and entire freedom from self-estimation."—Remarks of Jared Sparks, LL.D., Proceedings of the Mass. Hist. Soc. in Respect to the Memory of W. H. Prescott, Feb. 1, 1859, 17-19. See, also, 10-13; and (Mr. Gray's reference to Judge Prescott's influence in causing the publication of Ferdinand and Isabella) 16-17.

The success of the History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella was great and immediate. It was published in Germany, France, and Spain, in the respective languages of those countries; appeared in an Italian version at Florence, 1847-48, 3 vols. 8vo; and early in 1858 a translation in Russ was announced in Russia. Some bibliographical details connected with this work and Mr. Prescott's subsequent publications are reserved for later pages of our sketch. The original materials for the History of Ferdinand and Isabella now repose, in accordance with the bequest of the author, in the Library of Harvard College. Of the compliments showered upon the successful historian, not the least valued, and one certainly amply earned, was his election to membership by the Spanish Royal Academy of History, which holds its sessions in the city of Madrid. Thus cordially encouraged by the most eminent representatives of letters in many climes, Mr. Prescott again resumed his laborious studies, and in 1843 gave to the world the History of the Conquest of Mexico, and in 1847 his History of the Conquest of Peru. These works, the fruit of the most painstaking investigations into manuscript authorities procured from Spain, proved that the critics at home and abroad, if prompt and cordial, had not been too hasty in the designation of the elevated status which from the first day of the publication of the History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella they had assigned to its author. At least one of the Mexican editions (there were two) of the Conquest of Mexico was garbled by the translator to suit the political and religious atmosphere of the country: the Madrid edition is not liable to this grave inculpation. To the French translation, by M. Amédée Pichot, a reference by Mr. Prescott will be found in the Preface to the Conquest of Peru, xiii. In 1845 Mr. Prescott was induced to publish, under the title of Biographical and Critical Miscellanies, a selection of twelve papers from his articles contributed to the North American Review between the years 1821 and 1843, and a Memoir of Charles Brockden Brown, originally published in Sparks's American Biography in 1834. In the editions of the Miscellanies issued since 1851 will be found a valuable paper entitled Spanish Literature, being a review published in the North American Review for January, 1850, of Mr. Ticknor's admirable History of Spanish Literature, first issued in 1849, 3 vols. 8vo. The new editions of the Miscellanies are affectionately dedicated to Mr. Ticknor as a memorial of "studies pursued together in earlier days." This collection will be noticed more at length hereafter. In the summer of 1850 Mr. Prescott visited England, and in the autumn spent a short time in Scotland and on the continent.

"Many years before," remarks Mr. Stirling, (Encyc. Brit.) "he had passed through England as a young and comparatively unknown traveller, he now returned to it the American whom all others, perhaps, intelligent Englishmen were most desirous to see and converse with. During his sojourn in London, Mr. Prescott was one of the most observed and popular personages in a society ever 'to famous with native or hospitable.' In truth, he did not need his fame to aid his social success. His fine presence and countenance, his pleasing conversation, and his perfect manners would have ensured him a welcome even as a nameless stranger."

In 1855 Mr. Prescott published the first and second volumes, and in December, 1858, the third volume, of what would have proved, had it been completed, his greatest work,—The History of the Reign of Philip the Second, King of Spain. These volumes fully sustained—to elevate would have been scarcely possible—the reputation of the author as an accurate chronicler and eloquent narrator. Vols. i. and ii. appeared in Russia, 1858. Between the publication of vols. i. and ii. and iii. of Philip II., i.e. in 1857, he had added to a new edition of Robertson's History of the Reign of Charles the Fifth, Boston, 3 vols. 8vo, a supplement, (pp. 327–510, vol. iii.) entitled The Life of Charles the Fifth after his Abdication. Early in 1858 the apprehensions of Mr. Prescott's friends were aroused by a slight stroke of paralysis, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered, although he was soon able to resume his daily walks, and to spend two or three hours a day amidst his books and papers without any immediate inconvenience. On the 29th of January, 1859, he rose apparently well, and proposed to take a walk at his usual hour; but, as the morning was wet, he was persuaded by Mrs. Prescott to stay within. A few hours afterwards he left his secretary in the library, and stepped into an adjoining apartment, and, almost immediately after crossing the threshold, was seized with a second stroke of paralysis, of which he expired about two o'clock in the afternoon. The melancholy intelligence, as it was telegraphed from city to city over the wide land for which he had won "a name and a praise in the earth," produced a profound sensation of sorrow, which was testified by mournful gatherings and reverential tributes. Of the latter, one of the most interesting is from the pen of the Rev. William H. Milburn,—being an account of a conversation held with Mr. Prescott only forty-eight hours before his decease:

"On the evening in question," remarks Mr. Milburn, "Wednesday, January 26, Mr. Prescott entered the library with a slower and heavier step than when I had been in the habit of seeing him years before; but his manner had the same unaffected simplicity and cordial warmth. Whether a stranger would have perceived it, I cannot say; but my ear, sharpened by necessity, [see p. 1277, supra] at once detected the work of paralysis in an occasional thickening of the speech. I mean a difficulty in perfect articulation now and then. . . . He then proceeded to a mention of various mutual friends that had passed away since our last meeting, especially of the Hon. Abbott Lawrence and Francis C. Gray, Esq., at whose dinner-table we had often met, and then of some surviving friends, especially of George Ticknor, Esq., who, he said, had shortened and brightened what, but for him, must have been many a sad and weary hour.

He added, 'I suppose that Ticknor will never write another book; but he has been doing perhaps better for the community and posterity by devoting himself for several years to the interests of the Boston City Library, which may be taken in good part as his work, and a more valuable contribution to the good of the people has seldom been made. It is a rare thing for such an institution to get a man so rarely qualified by taste, knowledge, and accomplishment, to look after its interests with such energy and patience' . . . I said, 'Mr. Prescott, are you not coming to New York? We should all be very glad to see you there.' 'No,' he replied, 'I suppose that the days of my long journeys are over. I must content myself, like Horace, with my three houses. You know I go at the commencement of summer to my cottage by the sea-side at Lynn Beach, and at autumn to my paternal acres at Pepperell, which have been in our family for two hundred years, to sit under the old trees I sat under when a boy; and then with winter come down to hibernate in this house. This is the only travelling, I suppose, that I shall do until I go to my long home.' He then spoke in glowing and grateful terms, as I alluded to the interest taken in his health throughout the country, to the kindness which he had invariably experienced at the hands of his countrymen. 'I can never,' he said, 'be sufficiently grateful for the tokens of esteem, regard, and affection which I have had from them through all the years of my literary career. True, it makes me feel like an old man to see my fifteen volumes upon the shelf, but my heart is as young as it ever was to enjoy the love which the country has ever shown me.' When I said it was a cheering thing for a man to know he had given so much happiness as he had done by his books, he said that it was his own truest happiness to trust that he had been able to confer it. He said he hoped to live to finish Philip, which was now three-fifths done. As I bade him goodbye, I said, 'God bless you, Mr. Prescott, I know I breathe the prayer of the country when I say, May your life be spared many years to add volume after volume to the fifteen.' He rejoined, 'My greatest delight is the love of my friends and their appreciation of my labours.' Little did I think that the hand which so warmly grasped mine as he led me down the stairs would, ere eight-and-forty hours were passed, be cold and stiff in death. Peace to the memory of one of the sweetest and noblest of men that ever lived!"—Harper's Weekly, Feb. 12, 1859.

This is a true saying, and can be confirmed by "a cloud of witnesses" whose testimonials lie around us, but more of this anon.

Mr. Prescott left a widow, two sons, and a daughter. Having thus given a rapid summary of Mr. Prescott's literary career, we proceed to consider his publications more in detail, and shall conclude our sketch with some notices of his general characteristics as an author, and of his virtues as a man.

1. HISTORY OF THE REIGN OF FERDINAND AND ISABELLA THE CATHOLIC, Boston, American Stationers' Company, (Dec. 25, 1837, dated) 1838, 3 vols. 8vo., last ed., Phila., J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1868, 3 vols. 8vo. Repub. in England, France, Italy, and Germany, Lon., 1838, 3 vols. 8vo. Pub. by R. Bentley, who continued to republish Prescott's works in London as they appeared, until the latter part of 1858, when he disposed of his interest to the present sole publishers, Routledge, Warne, and Routledge, the senior of which firm had also previously published editions of Prescott's works. 12th London ed. of Ferdinand and Isabella, 1859, viz. I, Lib. ed., 2 vols. demy 8vo., steel plates, 21s. II, Cab. ed., 3 vols. p. 8vo., steel plates, 12s. III, 1 vol. ed., or 8vo, 5s.; IV., Cheap ed., 2 vols. fp. 8vo, bds. 4s. cl. 5s., adv. to 5s. 1861.

Copies printed in the United States and London to Jan. 1, 1860, 17,731. Before taking up, or after finishing, this work, the author should turn to Mr. Prescott's remarks on the Saracen dominion in Spain, the conquest of Granada, and the policy of Ferdinand and Isabella, in his review of Irving's Conquest of Granada, 1829, 2 vols. 12mo, published in the North American Review for October, 1829, 293–314. It is not to be denied that the portion of history selected by Mr. Prescott for illustration in these volumes had been neglected by the scholars of Germany, France, and England, and only superficially touched by Italian writers: it is equally certain that at an earlier date no faithful narration of the events of this reign could have been given to the world. In the days of Robertson, "the highways" of Spanish history may be truly said to have been "unoccupied, and the travellers"—the few adventurous travellers—"walked through by-ways,"—the "by-ways" of crumbling libraries in ruined monasteries and chaotic state-paper archives, guarded by the vigilant care of the Holy Office,—a vigilance only to be soothed by policy, seduced by guile, or soporated by gold. But Mr. Prescott had the advantage of the tragic annals of Llorente, the political disquisitions of Mariana, Sempere, and Capmany, the literal version of the Spanish-Arab Chronicles by Condé, the Colección de los Viajes de Navarrete, (see IRVING, WASHINGTON, p. 941,) the invaluable illustrations of Isabella's reign by Mr. Secretary Clemencin, many rare works and curious manuscripts purchased by his friend George Ticknor, in Spain, for his own library, and unpublished documents of priceless value, collected from all available quarters, under the directions of the historian, by the zealous agency of Alexander H. Everett, Arthur Middleton, and the learned bibliophile, Mr. O. Rich. So copious were the materials; but they were materials only,—useless save to the plastic hand of genius,—and with most men—with most zealous and dexterous scholars, even—they would either have remained unused, or would, from want of skill in the workmanship, have "perished with the using." Courage less resolute would not have projected, industry less patient would have hardly persevered in, taste less exquisite could never have so beautifully accomplished, the erection of this great monument. With what admiration it was hailed by foreign scholars on the continent of Europe, we have already seen. What was the verdict of the most eminent of English and American critical authorities? The adduction of some of these we shall preface by a brief citation from the review of the work in the Edinburgh Review, from the accomplished English pen of Don Pascual de Gayangos, (the learned translator of the Mahomedan Dynasties in Spain,) than whom there is no higher authority (See Ferd. and Is., 3d Lon. ed., 1841, Pref., Philip II., 1, Pref., v-viii, iii. 13, n.; Eng. Cyc., Biog., iv., 1856, 43; Lon. Athen., 1840, 103, 1844, 55)

"To combine and put together the immense materials respecting this reign, to ascertain the truth by adjusting the contradictory accounts of the Spanish and foreign writers, in one word, to write a history of that interesting period, endowed with all the graces of modern scholarship, and illustrated by the philosophical spirit of our age, was a task which still remained to be performed. How far it has been accomplished by Mr. Prescott, an American gentleman, who (under peculiar circumstances which he fully details in his preface, and which we shall hereafter notice) has devoted to it ten years of his life, we shall now proceed to examine. Mr. Prescott's merit chiefly consists in the skilful arrangement of his materials, in the spirit of philosophy which animates the work, and in a clear and elegant style that charms and interests the reader. He has now and then, by relying too much on his authorities, fallen into slight mistakes. We shall here conclude by stating, generally, that Mr. Prescott's work is one of the most successful historical productions of our time. Besides the merits which we have already alluded to, the author possesses one which, in our opinion, is worth all the rest—that is, impartiality. The inhabitant of another world, he seems to have shaken off all the prejudices of ours, he has written a history without party-spirit, and without bias of any sort. In a word, he has, in every respect, made a most valuable addition to our historical literature."—January, 1839, 878, 887, 404-405

It was Mr. Prescott's fate—it proved to be also his felicity—to be tried before learned judges and exacting critics. The editor of the London Quarterly placed upon the Bench that terror to all pretended enthusiasts in Andalusian scenery and Catalan customs, the late author of the famous Hand-Book, (see p. 611, supra), who is, or who ought to be, known by the sobriquet of "Spanish Ford." Mr. Ford deals out praise and censure with great apparent impartiality: we give some specimens of each.

"Many of his notes . . . are extremely unsatisfactory. Of the accuracy of his quotations and references we cannot speak too highly; they stamp a guarantee on his narrative, they enable us to give a reason for our faith, they furnish means of questioning and correcting the author himself, they enable readers to follow up any particular subject suited to their own idiosyncrasies,—for selections indicate rather the genius of the selector than that of the work from which he draws. This research and fidelity appear to be the marked features of Mr. Prescott's talent, which is synthetical, not analytical. He can collect facts, arrange details, and present a faithful and agreeable picture of the shell and husk of history. He is less successful in his attempts to unravel the web, to separate causes from effects, to distinguish motives from pretexts,—in a word, to catch a fixed, definite insight into the spirit of the fifteenth century. . . . His style is too often sequestrated and ornate, the stilted, wordy, false taste of Dr. Channing, without his depth of thought, the sugar and sack of Washington Irving, without the halfpenny-worth of bread,—without his grace and polish of pure, grammatical, careful Anglicism. . . . Another serious objection which we desire to point out to Mr. Prescott is a tendency to sneer at monarchies, courts, chivalry, and all those nobler institutions, the lack of which . . . forms the present weakness of, and will eventually decide the problem of, democracy now pending in the United States. . . . Mr. Prescott modestly expresses his sorrow at finding himself anticipated by Mr. Irving in two of the most brilliant portions of his theme, the conquest of Granada, and the history of Columbus, [see IRVING, WASHINGTON, p. 942;] and we fully enter into the natural feeling: 'présent qui ante nos nostra dixerint.' But if he will correct certain blemishes of style, which are unworthy of his talents, amiable character, and literary perseverance, he has no cause to fear a competition with Mr. Irving. The world is wide enough for all. There is nothing new under the sun. 'Le beau est mon bien, et je le reprend où je le retrouve.' The novelty consists in the fashion, the 'callida junctura' of the workman. 'à l'œuvre on connaît l'artisan' . . . Mr. Prescott, though heartily sympathizing with the hero, [Columbus,] has throughout endeavored to maintain the impartial spirit of a judge. . . . We must also repeat our opinion that, with all its errors and omissions of manner and matter, Mr. Prescott's is by much the first historical work which British America has as yet produced, and one that need hardly fear a comparison with any that has issued from the European press since this century began."—June, 1839, 7, 8, 9, 10, 41, 42, 58

In his Hand-Book for Spain, published six years later than the date of the preceding review, Mr. Ford makes many complimentary references to the History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella.

We continue our citations from British and other foreign critics.

"His excellent history of Ferdinand and Isabella"—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec 1843, 187

"Mr. Prescott has long been honourably known as the author of one of the most valuable historical works produced in the present age."—Edin. Rev., April, 1845, q. v

"Mr. Prescott has proved himself in this work to be most indefatigable. His industry has been immense. His sources of information were widely scattered. To bring them together could be no common labour. For almost every statement, sometimes to the unimportant and even trivial, he is prepared with his corroboration. He has taken nothing upon report and general credulity. He works his way through mountains of conflicting testimony. The principal fault of the publication is in its deficiency of philosophical generalization."—R. W. HAMILTON Brit. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1845, 232-276. review of 3d Lon. ed. Copied into the N. Y. Eccl. Mag., v. 145

"The history of Spain cannot boast of a more useful and admirable contribution since the publication of the great work of Robertson."—Brit. and Foreign Rev.

"Mr. Prescott, in his excellent History of Ferdinand and Isabella," &c.—Hallam's Literary History of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 310, n

"We cannot dismiss the book without observing that it is one of the most pleasing as well as most valuable contributions that have been made to modern history, that it is the only one that gives us a faithful and sufficient picture of a period so momentous as the latter half of the fifteenth century."—Lon. Athen., 1838, 42-44, (by Dr. Dunham)

"The History of Ferdinand and Isabella reads like a romance,—like one of those tales of the golden prime of Haroun al Raschid."—Lon. Times, Jan. 12, 1857

"One of the most remarkable historical compositions that have appeared for a long time."—Bibliothèque Univ. de Genève

"Without any disparagement to the fame of those great writers, it may be placed on the same shelf with the works of Robertson and Gibbon."—Lon. Gent. Mag., March, 1846, 227 Brog and Crit. Miscellaneæ

The critic of the Gentleman's Magazine for September, 1843, quoting from a letter from Horace Walpole to S. Horace Mann, dated Nov. 24, 1774, (see his Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 153,) a vaticination that

"The next Augustan age will dawn on the other side of the Atlantic: there will perhaps be a Thucydides at Boston, a Xenophon at New York, and, in time, a Virgil at Mexico, and a Newton at Peru, add, in a note,

"This part of the prophecy has been verified, for Mr. Prescott's History of Ferdinand and Isabella is written in a spirit and style worthy of Xenophon, [see Prescott compared to Thucydides,—Conquest of Mexico, infra,] and may rank among the first in the English language."—245

We know not to whom (unless to Mr. Mitford) to ascribe the verdict just cited; but the value of that which follows will not be questioned by scholars.

"The 'History of Ferdinand and Isabella' was published at the close of 1837 or the beginning of 1838; and on my arrival in Europe in the summer of 1840 I found it extensively known and duly appreciated. . . . Calling one day on the venerable Mr. Thomas Grenville, whom I found in his library, (the second in size and value of the private libraries of England,) reading Xenophon's 'Anabasis' in the original, I made some passing remark on the beauty of that work. 'Here,' said he, holding up a volume of 'Ferdinand and Isabella,' 'is one far superior.' With the exception of the Nestor of our literature, (Mr. Irving) no American writer appeared to me so widely known or so highly esteemed in England as Mr. Prescott; and when he visited that country, a few years later, the honours paid to him by all the cultivated classes of society, from the throne downward, were such as are seldom offered to the most distinguished visitant."—EDWARD EVERETT Proceed of the Mass. Hist. Soc., &c., Feb. 1, 1859, 46, 49

This it is easy to confirm. No one better understood the beatings of the literary pulse of England than the witty Canon of St. Paul's; and he expressed and compressed the enthusiasm of the habitués of Holland House, et hoc genus omne, in the quaint invitation

"When Prescott comes to England, a Caspian Sea of soup awaits him."—Memoir of Rev. Sydney Smith, i., chap. ix.

Had Mr. Smith forgotten Milton's allusion to the unfriendly demonstrations connected with the Caspian Sea? (Paradise Lost, book ii., l. 713-716.)

To the same effect is the testimony of a distinguished American statesman who visited England about eighteen months after the publication of Mr. Prescott's first work: "Tell Mr. Prescott that I have not met a literary man that has not spoken in terms of admiration of Ferdinand and Isabella"—DANIEL WEBSTER. Letter to I. P. Davis, Lon., June 24, 1839 Webster's Priv. Correspond., ii. 152.

Such was the gratifying reception of Mr. Prescott's first literary offspring has a familiar acquaintance of twenty years, have the rival claims of his children of maturer days, lowered this estimate?

The last commentator, and certainly one of the most competent, on Mr. Prescott's productions is the learned author of the Annals of the Artists of Spain, The Cloister-Life of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, and Velasquez and his Works.—Mr. Stirling, M.P. for Perthshire. In his interesting biographical sketch of Mr. Prescott, contributed to the Encyclopædia Britannica, 8th ed., 1859, xviii. 502-507, Mr. Stirling remarks,

"The Introduction to the History of Ferdinand and Isabella—a review of the early annals and political constitution of Castile and Aragon—is one of the most comprehensive surveys of a great subject ever presented to the historical student. The condition and relations of the crown, the nobles, the clergy, the cities, and the commons, are painted with a masterly hand, and are presented in a picture at once clear, concise, and complete. The wily, able Ferdinand and the good Isabella, the model of womanly heroism, are portrayed with consummate skill and delicacy, and neither Robertson nor Irving has excelled in easy pace the narratives of the siege of Malaga and the crowning conquest of Granada."—506

The historical student is referred specially to the review of Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella, from the pen of Count Adolphe de Circourt, in the Bibliothèque Universelle de Genève, between July, 1838, and Jan 1840: five articles.

"By the author's own countrymen it was received with a hearty welcome, and in England it met with almost unqualified praise: from the literary organs of all parties, while in the country whose favourite monarchs it celebrates it was greeted with enthusiasm, and the author was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Madrid. Nor has its popularity been evanescent.

Its popularity was well merited. For the first time, the period of history when Spain rose to a leading position among the nations of Europe was fully, clearly, and vividly placed before the English reader from original and official sources, and the narrative was conducted, and events and characters were estimated, with a fairness and conscientiousness which showed itself in every page, and led the reader to rest implicitly on the good faith of the historian."—English Cyclopædia, Biog., iv., 1857, 964

See, also, Lon. Lit. Gazette, 1854, 802.

In the opinions next to be cited it will be remembered that the unfinished History of Philip II. is not taken into consideration.

"Ferdinand and Isabella,—In my opinion his best work."—FRANCIS LIEBER, LL.D. Letter to the author of this Dictionary, Oct 16, 1856

So Humboldt, it is thought, gave the preference to Ferdinand and Isabella over the author's other works,—remarking that it was "an enduring history, and could never be superseded." On the other hand, the critic of the Edinburgh Review, in his notice (April, 1845) of the History of the Conquest of Mexico,—see our quotations respecting this work, infra,—predicts greater popularity for the latter. He was not mistaken. According to the title-pages, it appears that there were published in the United States in nineteen years, (1838-56,) of Ferdinand and Isabella, eleven editions, in thirteen years, (1843-55,) of The Conquest of Mexico, twenty-three editions. In London there appear to have been published in twenty-two years, (1838-59,) of Ferdinand and Isabella, twelve editions; in seventeen years, (1843-59,) of The Conquest of Mexico, ten editions.

"By the author's countrymen," remarks an English critic just cited, "Ferdinand and Isabella was received with a hearty welcome" the evidence of the truth of this statement has been anticipated by the figures above given; but it will be proper to cite some critical testimonies to the same effect. The first American review of Ferdinand and Isabella—a paper alive with the great personages of the times and their biographers—appeared in the North American Quarterly for January, 1838. From this valuable historical disquisition, from the pen of W. H. Gardiner, (see IRVING, WASHINGTON, p. 942, ante), we quote the summing up of the learned judge:

"Such are the weightiest of the trifling peccadilloes in a large work, which we can point out for the author's correcting, if he shall be pleased to adopt our judgment, in some future edition. And perhaps, after such an exhibition of copious merit on the one side, and petty faults on the other, faithfully laid open according to our ability, the reader may be ready to join us in saying—on such works we are content to rest the literary reputation of the country."—291

We quote some other American opinions;

"In every page we have been reminded of that untiring patience and careful discrimination which have given celebrity to the great, though not always impartial, historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire."—JOHN PICKERING. Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella. New York Review, April, 1838, 308

"As the period which Mr. Prescott selected was that in which the modern system of Europe may be said to have taken its rise, and was in an especial degree encumbered with falsehood and sophistry, it was a subject which seemed at once to tempt the historian by its importance and repel him by its difficulties. The History of Ferdinand and Isabella shows that Mr. Prescott thoroughly comprehended the revolution to which we have referred, and his exposition of it is admirable. His work accurately reflects the spirit of the age and the character of its prominent actors; and we have been especially struck with his felicity in developing character, not in an isolated analysis of qualities, but in the narration of the events which called them forth. He so blends character with events that their mutual relation is distinctly seen."—E. P. WHIPPLE. Prescott's Histories: Method. Quar. Rev., Jan 1848, and in his Essays and Reviews, 1852, ii. 173

"It has taken the rank of a classic in our language, and in the emulous favour with which it has been received on each side of the Atlantic may be read an assurance of the unbiased judgment of posterity."—GEO. S. HILLARD. N. Amer. Rev., Jan 1844, 158. Prescott's History of the Conquest of Mexico

"We cannot but timidly flatter ourselves that, one day or another, our American aspirants for literary honours will get more into the way of spending some time in sowing and reaping their laurels, preparatory to tuning their voices for the Harvest Home. A very few examples, at all like the recent one of Mr. Prescott's brilliant success, cannot fail of producing a decided effect of this kind, and whoever, by showing what a mind of high endowments owes to itself, and what it may achieve if it have but fair play, disposes our young scholars to be content to wait for applause till they have taken time to deserve it, has done a service to his country worthy of all grateful commemoration."—J. G. PALFREY. Hulhouse's Poems and Discourses. N. Amer. Rev., Jan 1840, 232

"The 'History of Ferdinand and Isabella' is a work that unites the fascination of romantic fiction with the grave interest of authentic events. Its author makes no pretension to analytical power, except in the arrangement of his materials, he is content to describe, and his talents are more artistic than philosophical, neither is any established theory or principle obvious; his ambition is apparently limited to skilful narration. Indefatigable in research, sagacious in the choice and comparison of authorities, serene in temper, graceful in style, and pleasing in sentiment, he possesses all the requisites for an agreeable writer, while his subjects have yielded so much of picturesque material and romantic interest as to atone for the lack of any more original or brilliant qualities in the author."—H. T. TUCKERMAN. Sketch of Amer. Lit., 1852

"Hardly nine years have passed since the publication of the History of Ferdinand and Isabella placed Mr. Prescott at once, by universal consent both in England and America, in the front of English historians. And what a golden account he has rendered of his labours during the brief period!"—FRANCIS BOWEN. Prescott's Conquest of Peru. N. Amer. Rev., Oct 1847, 366.

This "golden account" we must now proceed to examine,—first, however, referring the reader to A Review of that portion of Prescott's "Ferdinand and Isabella" where a parallel is drawn between Elizabeth of England and Isabella of Spain: with a Review of Campbell's Lects. on Poetry, (from New Month Mag.) both by Mrs. Elizabeth Sanders, Bost., 1841, 12mo; Chris. Exam., (March, 1838,) xxiv. 99, (by F. W. Greenwood,) Democrat Rev., (May, 1838,) ii. 160, (by George Bancroft,) Phila. Museum, xxxvi. 451; Lieber's Polit. Ethics, Ticknor's Hist. of Spain, Lit., 188, n. 189, n. 563, n. Everett's Orations and Speeches, iii. 198, Irving's Chronicles of the Conquest of Granada, Pref., xviii., Works, ed. 1848-50; Von Hefele's Life of Ximenes; Circourt's Hist. des Arabes en Espagne; Fox, CHARLES JAMES, GEORGE, ANITA, MRS.; IRVING, WASHINGTON, pp. 940, 941, 942, 943, 944. The student will also feel some interest in Ubertino Carrara's Latin epic, Columbus, (noticed on p. 941, supra.) Nor should we omit to notice that Mr. Joseph Russell has published within the last few years (Lon., 1851: see Lon. Athen., 1852, 17) a translation into English, from the Spanish of Don Manuel José Quintana, of the Memoirs of Gonsalvo Hernandez de Cordova, styled the Great Captain.

Aspinwall sold the copyright to Mr. Bentley for £650. 10th London ed., (Routledge, W. & R.), 1859, viz.: I., Lib. ed., 2 vols. demy 8vo, steel plates, 12s.; II., Cab. ed., 3 vols. p. 8vo, steel plates, 12s.; III., 1 vol. ed., er. 8vo, 5s.; IV., Cheap ed., 2 vols. 8vo, bds. 4s., el. 5s.; adv. to 5s., 1861. Copies printed in the United States and London to Jan. 1, 1860, 20,616. This work is founded upon about eight thousand folio pages of unpublished documents, duplicates of MSS. in the collections of Don Juan Baptista Muñoz and Señor Vargas Ponce, (both in the archives of the Royal Academy of History at Madrid,) and in the library of Don Martín Fernández de Navarrete, other original authorities, and such printed works on the subjects discussed as had previously been given to the world. The work was reviewed at length (pp. 187-235) in the London Quarterly, vol. lxxiii., Dec. 1843, by Dean H. H. Milman. We can quote but a few lines:

"Mr Prescott possesses high qualifications, and some peculiar advantages, for the execution of such a work. In his disquisitions on the political state and the civilization of the Aztec Kingdoms, he is full and copious, without being prolix and wearisome, his narrative is flowing and spirited, sometimes very picturesque, his style has dropped the few Americanisms which still jarred on our fastidious ear in his former work, and is, in general, pure and sound English. Above all, his judgments are unaffectedly candid and impartial. . . . We conclude with expressing our satisfaction that Mr. Prescott has given us an opportunity at this time of showing our deep sympathy, the sympathy of kindred and of blood, with Americans who, like himself, do honour to our common literature. Mr Prescott may take his place among the really good English writers of history in modern times, and will be received, we are persuaded, into that small community with every feeling of friendly and fraternal respect"—188, 235 This review was copied into the Boston Living Age, 1, 10-32

"Mr. Prescott appears to us to possess almost every qualification for his task. He has a pure, simple, and eloquent style—a keen relish for the picturesque—a quick and discerning judgment of character—and a calm, generous, and enlightened spirit of philanthropy. There is no exaggeration in asserting that his 'Conquest of Mexico' combines—some allowance, where that is necessary, being made for the inferior extent and importance of its subject—most of the valuable qualities which distinguish the most popular historical writers in our language of the present day. It unites the chivalrous but truthful enthusiasm of Colonel Napier, and the vivacity of the accomplished author of the 'Siege of Granada,' with the patient and ample research of Mr. Tytler. . . . It would be easy to fill our pages with sparkling quotations, with sketches of scenery worthy of Scott, with battle-pieces rivaling those of Napier, with pictures of disaster and desolation scarcely less pathetic than those drawn by Thucydides. But Mr Prescott has, no doubt, too much taste not to accept it as a compliment, when we say that every reader of intelligence forgets the beauty of his colouring in the grandeur of his outline, and that nothing but a connected sketch of the latter can do justice to the highest charm of his work. The 'Conquest of Mexico' is probably of less importance as a collection of facts, and of less merit as an intellectual effort, than the 'History of Ferdinand and Isabella,' but we think it even more secure of universal popularity"—Edin. Rev., April, 1845, lxxxi. 434-473 Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, (by Charles Phillips)

The perusal of this paper gratified Mr. Prescott. "We are embarrassed by the copiousness of the subject, and the exuberant richness of the successive pictures, and the variety of subjects it comprehends. Even the first volume is so comprehensive in its views as to afford at once a description of the natural features, the climate and productions of the country, and of the various and remote migrations of the people; a history of their government, laws and revenue, of their political state, their military institutions, and their religious belief and worship, of the arts of life and the degree to which they had attained, and of the domestic manners and habits, as well as of the discovery of the country by its future conqueror. . . . Mr. Prescott has also given us a valuable essay on that difficult and controverted subject, the origin of Mexican civilization, as connected with the magnificent ruins and architectural antiquities of Central America, discovered by Mr. Stephens, and with the remains of Palenque and Uxmal described by Dupax and Waldeck"—Lon. Genl. Mag., Oct. 1844, 339-359 Prescott's History of the Conquest of Mexico.

See, also, Gent. Mag., March, 1846, 227, where Prescott is placed before Robertson.

"The History of the Conquest of Mexico, by Mr. Prescott, a work still fresh in the recollection of our readers, served greatly to increase that reputation as an historian which he had acquired by his Ferdinand and Isabella. The subject was happily chosen by him"—Lon. Gent. Mag., July, 1847, 3-5 Prescott's History of the Conquest of Peru.

"We rejoice to see Mr. Prescott again in the field. The more closely we examine Mr. Prescott's work, the more do we find cause to commend his diligent research, as well as his care and candour in comparing together his numerous and oftentimes conflicting authorities. His vivacity of manner, and discursive observations scattered through notes as well as text, furnish countless proofs of his matchless industry. In point of style, too, he ranks with the ablest English historians; and paragraphs may be found in his volumes in which the grace and elegance of Addison are combined with Robertson's majestic cadence and Gibbon's brilliancy"—*Lon. "Miss Edgeworth has asserted that this is the best historical work published during the present century; she might have added, the best work ever published on the subject."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nov., ii., 1846, 376

"It is a noble work; judiciously planned and admirably executed; rich with the spoils of learning easily and gracefully worn; imbued everywhere with a conscientious love of the truth, and controlled by that unerring good sense without which genius leads astray with its false lights, and learning encombres with its heavy panoply. It will win the literary voluptuary to its pages by the attractiveness of its subject and the flowing ease of its style, and the historical student will do honour to the extent and variety of the research which it displays, and to the thoroughness with which its investigations have been conducted. We can confidently predict for it an extensive and permanent popularity. . . . It will take its place among those enduring productions of the human mind which age cannot stale and custom cannot wither"—GEORGE S. HILLARD *N. Amer. "The result of all his labours, of research, thought, and composition, was a history possessing the unity, variety, and interest of a magnificent poem. It deals with a series of facts, and exhibits a gallery of characters, which to have invented would place its creator by the side of Homer, and which to realize and represent in the mode Mr. Prescott has done, required a rare degree of historical imagination"—E. "Nous avons peu de documents aussi curieux et qui offrent autant d'intérêt que le catalogue du musée de Boturini. Cette collection renfermait presque toutes les anciennes peintures ou hiéroglyphes des Mexicains, un grand nombre de manuscrits très-importants sur l'histoire de ce pays, ainsi qu'une grande quantité de dictionnaires, de grammaires et d'autres livres écrits dans les diverses langues des Indigènes de la Nouvelle-Espagne. Une partie de ces documents n'existe plus, et le reste a passé dans différentes mains."

See, also, Prescott's Mexico, Index. Mr. Trübner, of London, well known both as a scholar and publisher, (we venture to style him the successor of Mr. O. Rich,) published in 1860, in one volume octavo, Mapoteca Colombiana: Colección de los Títulos de todos los Mapas, Planos, Vistas, etc., relativos á la America Española, Brazil, 6 Islas Adyacentes; por el Dr. Eszequiel Uricoechea de Bogotá, Nueva Granada. We also refer the reader to the Bibliographical Prolegomena prefixed to Mr. Trubner's excellent Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, (Lon., 1857, 8vo, pp. cxlix. 554.), especially to the careful collation of Bernstein's important work (containing 3687 literary notices, both biographical and bibliographical) on the progress of Literature and Science in Mexico and the adjacent countries. Another work also claims our notice. Within the last few months, and since Mr. Prescott's death, has been published A New History of the Conquest of Mexico, by Robert Anderson Wilson, Counsellor-at-Law, Author of Mexico and its Religion, &c., Phila., 1859, 8vo, pp. 539.

"We venture to say," remarks the (New York) Knickerbocker, "that had this book been published thirty years ago, Mr. Prescott would never have written of the Mexican Conquest as he did, and whoever writes or reads of it hereafter must take the facts which Mr. Wilson proves into his account."

"The apparent consequences are," says the Methodist Quarterly Review, "that some splendid fictions must disappear from the story of our continent, and some of the most valued volumes—not only of Robertson, but of Prescott—must leave the department of history, and take their position in the domains of romance."

"We are not yet prepared to criticise this book," remarks the North American Review, April, 1859, 576, "unless we adopt Sydney Smith's doctrine and regard ourselves as specially qualified to review it by not having read it. But we have read enough to see that it is a work of no ordinary ability, research, boldness, and vigour. Mr. Wilson has collected in Mexico all the materials there accessible for his use, and especially has examined the alleged monuments of Aztec civilization, which dwindle on a near approach. He pronounces Bernal Diaz a myth, and, of course, his so-called personal narrative a collection of myths. With all the fervour of an iconoclast, he deals destruction among historical traditions till now undoubted. We are not yet prepared to believe that his reading of this portion of American history will take its place as genuine, but we reserve our opinion till we have a right to form it."

Several other anonymous commendatory notices of the work will be found in the American Publishers' Circular, May 7, 1859, 225. See, also, Amer Theolog. Rev., May, 1859, 387, Lon Athen., 1859, ii 270. On the other hand, three eminent authorities, Mr. John Foster Kirk, late secretary to Mr. Prescott, (see Philip II., i, Pref., xvi.) Mr. George Ticknor, the author of the History of Spanish Literature, and Mr. E. G. Squier, the author of Travels in Central America and other learned antiquarian works, unite in condemning Mr. Wilson's volume as unworthy of the least degree of consideration. Mr. Kirk's comments will be found in the Atlantic Monthly Magazine for April and May, 1859; (Mr. Ticknor's, in the Boston Courier for May 7, 1859, (see, also, Proceed Mass Hist Soc, 1858-60, 277, and 1860-62, 101,) Mr. Squier's, in a letter to the New York Tribune, dated April 30, 1859, and in a letter to the author of this Dictionary, dated May 13, 1859.

Mr. Ticknor, after strengthening the evidence of the existence of Bernal Diaz by the adduction of the testimony (given since the appearance of Mr. Wilson's book) of the Abbé de Bourbourg, concludes,

"This is certainly pretty well for a myth! But to be serious. An author like Mr. Wilson, who makes the boldest assertions, and then is obliged to run for luck in order to find evidence that he may hope will support them,—who has so little fairness or judgment as is shown by his treatment of Dr. Robertson, and so little knowledge or spirit of inquiry as he has shown in the case of Bernal Diaz,—can really have no claim to the character of an historian. Still less has he a right to speak in any tone except one of perfect deference, when he mentions such names as those of Baron Humboldt and Mr. Prescott."

Mr. Squier remarks, (we quote a few lines from his letter of May 13, 1859, supra.)

"The work of Mr. Wilson in no degree justifies its title, still less its pretensions. It does not add a single new fact to our stock of knowledge on the subject to which it relates, and it is throughout characterised by dogmatism, presumption, and ignorance, rendered doubly offensive by a crude, inflated, and concealed style. Mr. Wilson has not only proved himself in every essential respect incompetent for the undertaking, but has brought discredit, if not contempt, on American scholarship, so far as he may be supposed to be an exponent of its character."

Another unfavourable review of Wilson's Conquest of Mexico, nearly four columns in length, by Mr. J. W. Dwinelle, of Rochester, New York, was published in the New York Tribune of April 12, 1859. We quote the concluding lines:

"We will not follow Mr. Wilson to the 'Lake of Mexico,' where his facts refute his argument. We have not examined his personal statements after the ill fortune we have had with his citations and engravings, that task would be beyond our capacity."

"But we are compelled to say that, having gone over much of the ground to which the researches of Mr. Prescott pointed the way, we have found his statements in every instance borne out by his citations; we have never found him suppressing, never mutilating, a material fact; and never in those authors who are not cited by him have we found an important fact which is not included in the completeness of his generalizations. Such was the conscientious integrity of a historian who considered the suppression of truth the same as a willful falsehood; such his exhaustive research, which permitted no important fact to escape him; such his modesty, which refused to encumber his pages with a merely cumulative erudition."

3. HISTORY OF THE CONQUEST OF PERU; WITH A PRELIMINARY VIEW OF THE CIVILIZATION OF THE INCAS. N. York, Harper & Brothers, 1847, 3 vols. 8vo; last ed., Phila., J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1868, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Repub. in English in France and Germany. Lon., Bentley, 1847, 2 vols. 8vo. Col. Aspinwall sold the copyright to Mr. Bentley for £800. 8th London ed., (Routledge, W. & R.,) 1859, viz.: I., Lib. ed., 2 vols. demy 8vo, steel plate, 21s.; II., Cab. ed., 3 vols. p. 8vo, steel plates, 12s.; III., 1 vol. ed., or. 8vo, 5s.; IV., Cheap ed., 2 vols. fp. 8vo, bds. 4s., cl. 5s., adv. to 5s., 1861. Copies printed in the United States and England to Jan. 1, 1860, 16,965.

In the preparation of this work Mr. Prescott used a portion of the MSS. collections referred to in our notice of the Conquest of Mexico, (supra), a part of the unpublished documents formerly in the possession of Lord Kingsborough, and other original materials, collected at great expense in England and on the continent.

"Mr. Prescott's style and manner of composition are adapted with singular felicity to this half-poetic history. His strong imaginative faculty, heightened by the peculiarity of his situation, (of which more presently,) delights in the rich and the marvellous, both in nature and in human action, he has acquired a skill of arrangement and grouping of characters and events which attest long and patient study of the highest models, while the calmer moral and Christian tone of his judgments by no means deadens his sympathies with the fiercer and more barbarous heroism of ancient days. His narrative presents in general, though not without some exceptions, a happy combination of modern historic philosophy with something of the life and picturesqueness of an ancient chronicle."—Lon Quar Review, Sept. 1847, 317-344. Prescott's Conquest of Peru. Copied into Bost. Liv. Age, xv 495-507.

"Already favourably known by his histories of the eventful and chivalrous reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, and of the exploits of the Great Marquis and his iron followers, Mr. Prescott has added to his well merited reputation by his narrative of the Conquest of Peru. The last of these works, of which Pizarro is the hero and Peru the scene, yields nothing in merit or interest to its predecessors."—Blackwood's Mag, July, 1847, 1-20. Prescott's Peru. Copied into Bost. Liv. Age, xiv 289-300.

"Who that has read any thing has left unread those charming histories of Mr. Prescott, The Conquest of Mexico and The Conquest of Peru? A philosopher pursuing his speculations upon humanity can nowhere find richer materials for the construction of his theories than in those volumes. A youth craving the excitement of imagination can nowhere enter into more wondrous regions of poetry and romance."—Blackwood's Mag, April, 1856, 421. Prescott's Philip II. (vol. i, ii.)

"The work is so alluring in its subject, so pleasing in its execution, and so moderate in its extent, as would never fatigue the attention or make any undue demands on the time. We do not hold out Mr. Prescott's style as one that is, to our taste, without faults. In his descriptive parts we think it too exuberant, too much abounding in epithet, erring on the side of too great fullness. It is a great fault in a writer to pour out all his stores without reserve, to leave nothing to the reader to supply, no spot unoccupied which he can appropriate, no touch which he can add, and we think that this graceful and judicious reserve of power is a very distinguishing feature in the style of Robertson."—Lon Genl Mag, July, 1847, 3-22. Prescott's History of the Conquest of Peru.

"In some respects the work before us is more interesting than 'The Conquest of Mexico,' by which it was preceded."—Lon Athen., 1847, 541. See, also, 568, 1194.

"Description in some sort is Mr. Prescott's first excellence; but he does not fail in philosophy, marking with a free and judicious spirit the crimes of his heroes, and their excuses, though perhaps, like Robertson, he allows the courage and capacity of the Spaniards to shade his vision as to their evil deeds. It is possible that he echoes a common error in grounding too much of their defence upon the spirit of the age."—Lon Spectator. Copied into Bost. Liv. Age, xiv 120-123.

"In delineation of the character of the hero of the conquest, it seems to us that great judgment is shown. Neither the lights nor the shades are too broadly or deeply drawn. What allied him to Cortes and what widely separates them, in his patient endurance, his incredible perseverance, his freedom from bigotry, his insatiable avarice, his reckless perfidy, and his indomitable cruelty, is patiently and well set forth. We have neither a perfect hero nor an absolute monster, but undoubtedly a most extraordinary man."—Lon Examiner. Copied into Bost. Liv. Age, xiv 176-180.

"This work has probably been the most extensively popular of Mr. Prescott's histories, though the subject would not seem to admit so many elements of interest as the others. . . . In the 'Conquest of Peru' his characteristic merits are displayed in their best aspect, exhibiting the effects of time and experience in giving more intensity to his conceptions and more certainty to his language. Accordingly, we have not here to chronicle a decay of power, but its freer and more vigorous expression."—A. P. Whipple: Method Quar. Rev., April, 1848: (Prescott's Conquest of Peru) and in his Essays and Reviews, ii. 187-308.

But we feel unwilling to proceed to our next heading without quoting a few lines from the eloquent pen of the author of the Cloister-Life of the Emperor Charles V.

"In the Conquest of Mexico and the Conquest of Peru," remarks Mr. Stirling, (Encyc. Brit., ut supra), "and especially in the chapters on the civilization of the Aztecs and the Incas, Mr. Prescott displays great sagacity in ascertaining the scattered fragments of social edifices, which were destroyed before they could be intelligently delineated, and in recalling to their living forms the dry bones of the extinct races which inhabited them. He also appears to have shaken off the diffidence of a stranger in the historical field. His style betokens more self-confidence, and is bolder and more animated. His descriptions of scenery, in which he is always happy and never redundant, are more full and vivid, and are elaborated with the greater care which was required by the strangeness of unfamiliar lands. Mexico spreads her matchless valley, her lake, and her imperial city before our eyes, we wander through the royal gardens, beneath the giant cedars, of Tezcuco, the golden halls of the Inca and the blazing temples of the sun unfold themselves before us, we follow the silver-shod cavalry of Pizarro through the flowery dales of the Cordilleras, or we ascend through the pastures of the llama or the stern regions where the condor hovers in the tropical sun around the peaks of the Andes. The account of the triste noche, the rueful night in which, after the death of Montezuma, Cortez and his band retreated across the lake and along the broken causeway, cutting their way through a nation in arms, is one of the finest pictures of modern historical painting."—506-07

Announced in Russ in Russia early in 1858. Copies of vols. i. and ii. printed in the United States and England to Jan. 1, 1860, 13,000

In the preparation of these volumes Mr. Prescott is said to have employed six years. A letter written by him from Brussels in the summer of 1850 (see Philip II., i. 342, n.) will show the enthusiasm with which he entered into the spirit of the age of Charles the Fifth, and will probably remind the reader of the "musings" of the historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire "amidst the ruins of the Capitol, while the barefooted friars were singing vespers in the Temple of Jupiter."

Vols. i. and ii. bring down the story to the execution of Count Egmont and Hoorn, in 1568, and to the imprisonment and death of Don Carlos. In the collection of materials for this history Mr. Prescott spared neither time, cost, personal labour, nor the services of willing friends. Public and private collections were freely opened to his use, and the long-closed doors of the ancient Archives of Simancas, (respecting which, see Lon. Athenæum, 1860, ii. 593, 910, 1861, i. 61; 1862, ii. 653, and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1857, ii. 152,) and of other secret repositories, flew open at the name of the magician whose potent genius had reanimated the glories of the Old World and depicted with a vivid pencil the sorrows and desolation of the New. Notices of the valuable mass of unpublished materials thus collected will be found in the Preface to Philip II., and in Mr. Edward Everett's Remarks before the Massachusetts Historical Society, Proceedings, &c., Feb. 1 1859, 47-49.

Some time before the publication of the first and second volumes of Philip the Second, Mr. Ticknor, after a gorgeous exhibition of the "goodly stones" and brilliant gems of which the great architect was to construct his noble edifice, remarks,

"These grand materials, thus grouped together, constitute a subject for history which the great masters of ancient or of modern times might well envy to Mr. Prescott. That it will— even more than any thing he has yet done—insure him a place by their side, we do not doubt."—Dryden's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, ii. 237.

The prospect would indeed have appalled one less confident in his own resources, less conscious of greater strength than had yet been developed by past exertions. Under Mr. Prescott's infirmity, a task requiring such minute scrutiny and unwearied application ("day-labour, light denied") was—or would have been to other men—most discouraging. But Mr. Ticknor—for he knew the builder as well as the difficulties of his enterprise—was fully justified in his prediction there were no lamentations over the diminished glories of a later temple. The muse of Dryden, eloquent in deploring the proofs of intellectual decadence, would have sought in vain for inspiration in a comparison of the earlier and the last fruits of the genius of the historian.

The first instalment of Philip the Second was received with enthusiasm in all countries.

"The great historian of the New World," writes Humboldt to a German correspondent, "who has scarcely a rival in the Old one, the excellent Prescott, has rejoiced us with a new book."

From M. Guizot's review of the volumes, in the Edinburgh Review for January, 1857, we have already quoted, (MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHPOR, p. 1379,) and recommend the reader to peruse the whole paper. A few lines must be extracted in this place, as an amusing instance of differences of opinion between great critics, or—if M. Guizot be correct in his analysis—of a great change in the literary characteristics of the historian. One of the most prominent features of Mr. Prescott's style, in the opinion of many readers, is the accuracy, brilliancy, and general felicity of his descriptions. For more than any thing else, perhaps, he has been blamed for occasional want of simplicity in language. But hear M. Guizot on these points.

"To this merit of a well-arranged history Mr. Prescott adds that of an easy, unaffected, though somewhat frigid, power of narration. He belongs to the historical school of Robertson, judicious rather than profound in its general views, and more remarkable for simplicity than for descriptive power. The pictures Mr. Prescott has given us are never wanting in truth, but they are sometimes wanting in life. History only becomes dramatic on two conditions: it must have either the passion of the politician or the imagination of the poet. Mr. Prescott has neither the one nor the other, he is a calm and enlightened philosopher, an accomplished man of letters, he is well read in the history of Philip II., and he relates it with fidelity, but he has studied it after the lapse of three centuries in all the serenity of his own reflections and the tranquillity of a New England study faithfully, therefore, as these events and these personages are described by him, he leaves them where he finds them,—in their tombs."

Compare this dictum with that of the critic of the London Athenæum, Nov. 3, 1855, infra. We continue our citations:

"This story of that terrible collision of passions . . . is described by Mr. Prescott in language not of partisanship, scarcely with human indignation or human sympathy, but in 'the still sad music' of wise melancholy. We are taken into the sixteenth century as among men whose faults are buried in their tombs. The age lies spread out before us as if it were a church-yard in moonlight, yet without the shadows which make the forms of moonlight fearful, we walk among the realms of the dead, loving those to whom love is due,—feeling for those whom in life we should most have hated, only the sorrowing pity with which we should read their names upon their sepulchres."

"This is all which we can say now. The best judgment which Mr. Prescott can receive upon his work will be the deserved adsalration of America and England."—Westminster Review, Jan. 1856.

"Of Mr. Prescott's book we have already spoken. Like all his writings, it is elegant, rational, cultivated, written in a kindly, genial spirit, dispassionate and tolerant."—Westminster Review, April, 1856: Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic.

"If, therefore, the reader of the present volumes, recalling to mind the fascination of those [Mr. Prescott's] previous works, should feel somewhat disappointed in the Reign of Philip II, let him reflect for a moment on the different nature of the subject which was here to engage the labours of the historian . . . We shall look with interest for the remaining portion of Mr. Prescott's work."—Blackie Mag., April, 1856: Prescott's Philip II.

"We are gratified to find that Mr. Prescott has undertaken this important history. No one can be better qualified for the task than himself, both from his previous knowledge of the history of Spain, and his command of hitherto unemployed materials, but more than all his skill and judgment in using them . . . We close these volumes with much pleasure, hoping soon to receive the remaining portion of this valuable history, meanwhile recommending them to all our readers as a most carefully studied and graphic narrative of those eventful times."—Brit Quar Rev, Feb. 1856. Copied into Boston Living Age, xlviii 449-468.

Both this critic and M. Guizot (ubi supra) complain that Mr. Prescott has devoted too many pages to the siege of Malta. "He has evidently been led away by the charm of his subject," remarks the latter, "graphically and powerfully is it told by Mr. Prescott," is the verdict of the former.

"In addition to its substantial value as a contribution to the political, religious, and social annals of Europe, it derives some of its most admirable qualities from the peculiar genius of its author. In a warmly-coloured style—clear, flexible, and full of variety—Mr. Prescott narrates the incidents of Philip's reign. His story moves swiftly, but is nowhere incomplete. The personages are well grouped, the order of circumstances and the order of time are well reconciled, the events are neither confused nor isolated. The book is at once pictorial and sober, critical and dramatic. The historian has surmounted with singular art the obvious difficulties of his subject. Tracing the origin and cause of these political, religious, and military events, Mr. Prescott fills his canvas with accessory details,—with delicately tinted pictures of social life,—with grand architectural perspectives,—with pageants described in language which reflects the gorgeous varieties of Burgundian pomp and splendour.

When complete, it will rank justly with Mr. Prescott's former works, which have taken permanent place in all historical libraries."—Lon Athenæum, Nov. 3, 1855, 1263-1265. Copied into the Boston Liv Age, xlviii 27-32.

The same periodical, (Athen, March 1, 1856, 261.) in a review of Mr. Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic, remarks,

"The work seems to have been composed and printed before Mr. Prescott published the commencement of his 'Life of Philip the Second,' otherwise the admirable pictures and the equally admirable criticisms of Mr. Prescott would not, in all probability, have been slighted by Mr. Motley, who traverses much of the same ground and appeals to many of the same authorities."

"The story of Philip contains as much graphic matter, colours as bright, anecdotes as pleasant, criticism as sound, historical views as broad and luminous, as the story of Ferdinand and Isabella. It is the book to sustain a reputation,—and to increase it."—Lon Reader, Nov. 1855.

"What historical reader does not know how much of the colour and fulness of life Mr. Prescott can throw into a narrative that is nevertheless succinct and rapid, its salient features admirably grouped and its matter well condensed? We need only assure every such reader that these new volumes are entirely worthy of a place beside their predecessors, that they fulfil the expectation of the public, and perfectly maintain—for in this way they could scarcely exalt—the author's reputation."—Lon Examiner, Nov. 1855.

See, also, London Times, January 12, 1857.

"Mr. Prescott was again to achieve great and unquestionable success. Of the importance of the addition which this work has made to English historical literature there is but one opinion. The excellences of the author's previous works are all here,—the picturesque narrative, the lucid style, the generous yet judicial spirit, the thorough digestion and scrupulous sifting of the materials,—often not only contradictory in themselves, but embarrassing in their richness,—and, above and pervading all, the thorough integrity of purpose, the earnest and untiring pursuit and ever-present love of truth, which, amid his many admirable qualities, is that which is perhaps his prime characteristic as a historian."—English Cyclopædia, Biog, iv., 1857, 964. See, also, 792, (Philip II.)

In Italy, the arrival of the first and second volumes of Philip was announced by the Revista Contemporanea of Turin, and the work, so far as completed, is declared to be "a monument of thorough study and research, worthy of the author's fame. The style is clear, flexible, and dignified, at the same time picturesque and severe, critical and dramatic. This celebrated American, born in Massachusetts the year 1796, is also a connoisseur in our literature, and among his essays are two on Italian poetry, first published in the North American Review. We hope to be able hereafter to announce an Italian translation of his Philip II, as we announce to-day the publication at Florence of a Compendium of the History of Peru before the Spanish Conquest, derived from Mr. Prescott's work, [Madrid edition, 1851.]"

"The author's task was arduous in the highest degree . . . Suffice it to say, for the present, that the difficulty of the achievement is but the measure of the genius and industry manifested in its successful accomplishment, and that expectations founded on the author's previous works are, if possible, more than realized in this."—A. P. PRESCOTT, D.D., N Amer Rev, April, 1856: Critical Notices, 10.

"Of the merits of this particular work we have only to say that they equal those of its predecessors. The style is, if any thing, more easy and fluent, and all the parts show the same thorough preparation and uniform polish and finish . . . The chapters on the Knights Hospitallers of St John and the siege of Malta are particularly interesting, and, like many other portions of those volumes, will undoubtedly always be ranked among the finest passages of modern history."—C. W. UPHAM: N Amer Review, July, 1856, 96-103: Prescott as an Historian.

"Among the thousand readers of the graceful pages in which Prescott has told a portion of the tale of Philip II, are there not some who will give a minute's thought to that other Peninsular nation which Philip with difficulty subdued?"—T. W. HIGGINSON: N Amer Review, Oct. 1856, 456: Portugal's Glory and Decay. See, also, Oct. 1861, 456, (by C. C. Smith, of Boston.)

PHILIP THE SECOND, 8vo, vol. iii., Boston, Phillips, Sampson & Co., Dec. 1858, last ed., Phila., J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1868, London, (Routledge, W & R.), 1858: I, Lib. ed., 8vo; II, Cab. ed., p. 8vo, 6s.; III, Cheap ed., bds 2s., cl 2s. 6d., vols. i., ii., (4th ed of these, 1859,) and iii. are issued (Routledge, R & W, 1859) as follows: I., Lib. ed., 3 vols demy 8vo, steel plates, 42s., II., Cab. ed., 3 vols. p. 8vo, steel plates, 15s., III., 2 vols. cr. 8vo, 10s.; IV., Cheap ed., 3 vols. fp. 8vo, bds 6s., cl 7s. 6d. The same house also issued Mr. Prescott's four histories, —Ferdinand and Isabella, Mexico, Peru, Philip II., vols. i., ii., iii.,—all in 22 one-shilling parts. Copies of vol. iii. printed in the United States and England to Jan. 1, 1860, 8000.

This is indeed cheap for such ware; and, as much has been said both respecting the failure of Mr. Prescott to obtain copyright-money for Philip the Second and the extent to which he intended to carry that noble history, we are disposed to give some authentic information on these subjects, extracted from letters of Mr. Prescott to the writer,—the author of this Dictionary. Under date of February 27, 1857, Mr. Prescott remarks,

"The query you put to me as to the time which will be occupied by me in completing the history of Philip II, I believe (Edipus himself could not answer. If I had good eyes and health, I might certainly accomplish it in half a dozen years, allowing three volumes for the remainder of the work, [i.e. five in all.] But my labours have been much interrupted of late by the state of my health, and I fear I cannot count upon such progress. The work may extend to six volumes. I had a contract with my London publisher, limiting me to that number, for which I was to receive from him £1000 a volume,—when the decision in the House of Lords that foreigners are not entitled to copyright, left me at liberty to write as many volumes and with as little profit as I please. Here I have made no contract as to the number, which I think, however, should not exceed five."

To the above may be added that two houses each offered Mr. Prescott £1000 per volume for Philip the Second.

In answer to a hint elicited by the letter just quoted, Mr. Prescott thus wrote us, March 7, 1857.

"I am much obliged to you for the hint you have given me in your note of the 4th inst., respecting English copyright. My publisher was so well satisfied that a good one could be obtained in the way you suggest, that he made me very liberal offers if I would go to London and stay there during the printing and publication of Philip the Second. But I loved the sea too little, and my home too well, to accept his proposals."

See, also, R. C. Weld's Vacation Tour, 1855, 8vo; Stirling's Memoir of Prescott, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xviii. 505. We observe that Mr. Stirling remarks that Mr. Prescott's income from his writings "has been estimated at from £4000 to £5000 a year." The aggregate sale of his four histories and the volume of Miscellanies to Jan. 1, 1860, has been 195,971 volumes. The third volume of Philip II. (embracing the period 1566 to 1574) is mainly occupied by the revolt of the Moors, the battle of Lepanto, and the building of the Escorial. Lord Macaulay, in a letter to a Boston correspondent, commended this volume in the highest terms, and expressed the opinion that, with the exception of a few chapters of some of the author's previous works, his last production was his best. In this opinion he is not singular:

"The genius of Mr. Prescott as a historian"—it is the verdict of the intelligent critic of the London Athenæum, Dec. 18, 1858—"has never been exhibited to better advantage than in this very remarkable volume, which is grounded on varied and ample authority. . . His fifth book, to borrow a phrase from foreign criticism, marches like a cavalry squadron. It is swift, animated, glittering; it is radiant, pictorial, and flushed, as though the writer were exulting in his amplitude of materials and perfect mastery of details. Taken alone, it would appreciably enhance the literary reputation of Mr. Prescott. The style throughout runs on a high level, but is free from all art."

strial pomp and rhetorical redundancy. It is at once simple, firm, and dignified."—791, 793.

The London Critic tells us that the events chronicled in the third volume

"are episodes partly of such historical and biographical significance, partly so effluent with picturesque material, and they are altogether recorded by Mr. Prescott with such ability and animation, that the reader never feels a sensation of tedium, or that his patience is being trifled with. . . . As a work of art, the volume is complete in itself. . . . We take leave of Mr. Prescott's admirable volume with a renewed sense of the obligations which history owes him. The present volume alone would establish his claims to a high rank among contemporary historians."

"Prescott's last volume was finished after he was sixty; and it is a perfect model of skill in narration. Every statement is the result of most elaborate research, and yet, as he passes from court to country, from valley to mountain-ranges, from Spain to the Levant, among Moors, and Turks, and Christians, and corsairs from Barbary his movements are as easy and graceful as those of the humming-bird as it dives after honey among the flowers of summer, and his pictures of battles are as vivid as though the sun had taken them in its brightest colours at the very moment they were raging."—GEORGE BANCROFT Address before the N. York Histor. Soc'y. Prescott Memorial, 1859, xlii.

"The new volume is more vivid in colour and dramatic in incident than either of its predecessors. What Spaniard has portrayed the Life and Times of Philip II more successfully than our own Prescott?"—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN

Prosper Mérimée, of the French Academy. From this article, the concluding lines of which were saddened by the news of Mr. Prescott's death, we shall have occasion to quote on a future page.

"In the reign of Philip II," remarks Mr. Stirling, "unflagging strength and unabated fire are displayed in the treatment of the troubles in the Low Countries, the siege of Malta, the rebellion of the Moriscos, and the battle of Lepanto."—Encyc. Brit., ut supra, 507

5. THE LIFE OF CHARLES THE FIFTH AFTER HIS ABDICATION being a Supplement to a new edition of Robertson's History of the Reign of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, Bost., (Dec 1856,) 1857, 3 vols 8vo, Phillips, Sampson & Co., last ed. J. B. Lippincott & Co, 1868, 3 vols. 8vo; London, 1857, viz. I, Lib. ed, 2 vols. demy 8vo, steel plates, 24s., II., Cab. ed, 2 vols. p 8vo, steel plates, 12s.; III., 1 vol. ed., or. 8vo, 5s., IV, Cheap ed, 2 vols. fp 8vo, bds. 4s., cl. 5s. Last edition, (Routledge, W. & R.,) 1859, viz. I, Lib. ed, 2 vols demy 8vo, steel plate, 21s., II., Cab. ed, 2 vols. p 8vo, steel plate, 10s., III., 1 vol. ed., or. 8vo, 5s., IV., Cheap ed, 2 vols fp. 8vo, bds. 4s., cl. 5s. Copies printed in the United States and London to Jan. 1, 1860, 6900.

The reign of Charles V. is the intermediate link between those of Ferdinand and Isabella and Philip II., and completes an unbroken period of 150 years of the Spanish annals. To the life of the emperor subsequently to his abdication, some six or seven pages only are devoted by Dr. Robertson; and these contain so many errors that they had been better unwritten. Robertson was unable to obtain the information then looked up in the archives of Simancas. Of this information, and of the labours of his predecessors, Mr. Stirling, M. Pichot, M. Gachard, and M. Mignet, Mr. Prescott has freely availed himself, as stated in his prefaces to the Life of Charles the Fifth, and his own supplement.

It was the earnest desire of Mr. Edward Everett—and where could be found a better counsellor?—that Mr. Prescott should not content himself with supplementing another man's labours.

"I remonstrated with him," says Mr. Everett, "for passing over the reign of the emperor Charles V. urging upon him that the materials which had become accessible since Robertson's time, especially the archives of Simancas, (the want of access to which was so much deplored by that author,) would enable him to treat that period to as good advantage as that of Ferdinand and Isabella or Philip. But he modestly persisted in thinking that the reign of Charles V. was exhausted by Robertson. The supplementary chapter with which he has enriched the edition of Robertson's work published under his supervision a few years since, is sufficient proof that it would have been in his power to construct an original history of the reign of Charles V. which would have fully equalled in interest any that has been produced by him."—Proceedings of the Mass. Hist. Soc., &c., Feb. 1, 1859, 46-47.

"His supplement is not a mere condensation of simple details supplied by others on the contrary, it is original in form, purpose, and (to some extent) material. Mr. Prescott uses without abusing the rights of a later writer." In Mr. Stirling's volume Yuste is a by-path of history, in Mr. Prescott's it is the highway. . . . After writing and quoting so much from these new books of European history, we scarcely need to add that they are most carefully written, in Mr. Prescott's best manner, and will attract all serious readers."—Lon. Athen., Nov. 29, 1856, 1457-59. Copied into the Bost. Liv. Age, lii 365-370.

"A sequel in which he related, in his usual agreeable style, the true history of the emperor's retirement and death, events upon which recently-discovered documents have thrown so much light."—MR. STIRLING Encyc. Brit., ut supra, 506

"His name is one that might fitly be joined on the same title-page with that of Robertson, and of the union has, in the present instance, certainly come strength."—Lon. Examiner. Copied into the Bost. Liv. Age, lii 346.

"It bears all the characteristics of style and manner, all the tokens of elaborate research and philosophic vision, which it has been, and will be, truest, yet not, our frequent privilege to record."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D. N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1857, 281. Critical Notices, 26

Respecting the foreign versions of Prescott's histories we have the following interesting note, by one who speaks by authority:

"The Italian translations were all made at Florence, but the only one that was ever finished was the Storia del Regno di Ferdinando e Isabella ec da Ascanio Tempestini, Firenze, 1817-48, 3 vols in 8vo. The Peru was twice attempted, in a very slovenly manner each time, and failed. The Mexico and Philip II were not attempted. In Germany—to go on with the translations—there were I Geschichte der Regierung Ferdinand's und Isabella, Leipzig, 1842, 2 vols 8vo. 2 Geschichte der Eroberung von Mexico, Leipzig, 1844, 2 vols 8vo. 3 Geschichte der Eroberung von Peru, Leipzig, 1848, 2 vols 8vo.

These three, all published by Brockhaus, were translated, anonymously, by a gentleman named Elerty, who died before any thing else of Prescott's appeared. 4 Geschichte Philip's des Zweiten was translated by Joh. Schorr, Leipzig, Wigand, 3 vols 8vo, 1866, &c. 5 Das Klosterleben Karl's V., translated from the addition to Robertson, by Julius Seybl, was published in 1857, in the 23d vol of Lori's Conversations- und Reisebibliothek. In France Baudry reprinted, in the original English, I Mexico, 1843, 3 vols 8vo, and 2 Peru, 1847, 3 vols 8vo. Didot published translations I Conquête du Mexique, by Amédée Pichot, 1846, 3 vols 8vo, and 2 Règne de Philippe II., by G. Renouon and P. Ithier, vol. 1 only, just out, 1860. In Mexico the Conquest of Mexico was twice translated and published. 1 by Joaquín Navarro, 1844-46, 3 vols 8vo, and 2 by José María González de la Vega, [1844, 2 vols r 8vo,] with many new notes by Lucas Alaman. —George Ticknor to N. Austin Allibon, Feb. 2, 1860. For a fuller notice, see Ticknor's Prescott, 1864, Appendix E.

Elaborate reviews of Prescott's histories, as they successively appeared, from the pen of the learned Count Adolphe de Circourt, enriched the columns of the Bibliothèque Universelle de Genève.

Mr. Prescott contributed eight other articles to the North American Review, in addition to the thirteen contained in his Miscellanies: these are, I Byron's Letter on Pope, Oct. 1821; II. Essay-Writing,

April, 1822; III. French and English Tragedy, Jan. 1823; IV. Novel-Writing, July, 1827; V. English Literature of the Nineteenth Century, July, 1832, VI. Tales from the German, Jan. 1838; VII. Kenyon's Poems, July, 1839; VIII. Mariotti's Italy, April, 1842; to which are to be added two Critical Notices: I. Mr. Sprague's Prize Poems, July, 1824; II. Leisure Hours at Sea, April, 1826. For The Club-Room, of which four numbers only appeared, (Feb. to July, 1820,) of which he was the editor, he wrote three articles; and he published many pieces in the local papers. He also contributed, in 1849, to the Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society, 3d Series, vol. x., 1849, 204-224, a Memoir of John Pickering, LL.D., (supra;) and in 1856, to the National Portrait-Gallery, a biographical sketch of Abbott Lawrence—this was also privately printed, separately, 1856, 4to. We have already referred to a notice in the Revista Contemporanea of Turin, of the articles on Italian poetry (X. and XI., supra;) in the volume of Mr. Prescott's Miscellanies. The whole volume is reviewed at some length (the article is principally composed of quotations from Prescott and Petrarch) in the Gentleman's Magazine for March, 1846, 227-245. After an animated eulogy on the histories of Ferdinand and Isabella, and the Conquest of Mexico, in which, as we have seen on a previous page, Mr. Prescott is judged to have "much exceeded Robertson," the critic proceeds to consider the Miscellanies:

"The volume," he says, "is not distinguished for much originality of observation or refinement of critical ingenuity, and still less for any acquaintance with literature beyond what is generally obtained by persons of studious habits and cultivated minds, but Mr. Prescott always shows a sufficient acquaintance with his subject, he commands respect by the temperance of his judgments, and he pleases by the beauty of his language and the elegance of his style."

"Great learning or profundity of criticism there is not," remarks the London Literary Gazette, "but all who love a light and pleasant style of observation thrown over topics of universal interest will find enough here to afford them acceptable information and rational pastime"—August 30, 1845, 576.

"All good" is the verdict of the London Athenaeum, "and some noticed at the time, with commendation, in the Athenaeum"—Aug. 23, 1845, 835.

"As a critic and essayist," remarks Mr. Stirling, "Mr. Prescott would have attained great eminence had he pursued that path of letters. His essays on Cervantes, Molière, Scott, and Italian narrative poetry, are written with much taste, and with a just appreciation of their subjects. His reviews are none of them examples of the slashing style of criticism. When he turned aside from his own chosen course, it was for the purpose of throwing some fresh light upon the old master-pieces, or of bidding an unknown fellow-labourer welcome to the temple of fame. If a blockhead was to be lashed, or a knave exposed, he left them to critics who loved to perform such operations. It was very characteristic of his gentle and genial nature that he prefaced his volume of essays, which most readers will be disposed to regard as eminently calm and candid in tone, with the wish 'that some of his critical judgments had been expressed in a more qualified and temperate manner.'"—Encyc. Brit., ut supra, 507.

It is almost needless to remark that Mr. Prescott's merits as a historian were cordially recognized by literary societies at home and abroad. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred by Columbia College, New York, in 1840, by the College of South Carolina in 1841, by Harvard University in 1843; and by the University of Oxford in 1850. Shortly after the publication of his History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, as we have seen, he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of History at Madrid; the same honour was awarded by the French Institute, (Class of Moral and Political Philosophy, as successor to Navarette,) in 1845, by the Royal Society of Literature, (through Henry Hallam,) and by the Society of Antiquaries, (through Lord Mahon,) and in 1852 (see MACAULAY, RT. HON. THOMAS BABINGTON, M.P., BARON MACAULAY, p. 1161, ante) by the Royal Irish Academy.

We have quoted Mr. Stirling's and Mr. Everett's accounts of the evidences of consideration accorded to Mr. Prescott in England during his last visit to Europe, in 1850.

"I was there before him," remarks Mr. Curtis, "and when his purpose to make this visit was known, it is no exaggeration to say that in all ranks and all forms of society in which intelligent men and women were found, there was evident a sensation of anticipated pleasure, a delightful expectation of curiosity and interest, which no countryman of his could witness without pride. What followed after his arrival, you all know. Public and private honours, the homage of the head and the homage of the heart, were showered upon him by all ranks."—Proceedings Mass Hist. Soc., etc., Feb. 1, 1850, xl.

"Wherever the English language is spoken," writes the historian of the Dutch Republic—"over the whole earth—his name is perfectly familiar. We all of us know what his place was in America. But I can also say that in eight years [1851-1859] passed abroad I never met a single educated person, of whatever nation, that was not well acquainted with his name, and hardly one who had not read his works. No living American name is so widely spread over the whole world."—J. Lothrop Motley to William Amory, Rome, 20th February, 1859.

"No sooner had I touched my foot upon the English shores," [in May, 1858,] remarks Mr. Felton, "than questions with regard to his condition were addressed to me by numerous English friends; and I happened to meet some of those who had known him best and most affectionately in this country and in Europe. It was a satisfaction to me that I had it in my power to give them the latest news on a subject which seemed to interest the heart of the whole literary world."—Proceedings Mass Hist. Soc., etc., Feb. 1, 1859, 28.

The present writer—the author of this Dictionary—can add something to this testimony: Mr. Ingersoll, the American ambassador to the Court of St. James in 1852-53, wrote to us on his return to this country,

"You are aware of the estimate in which some of our American historians, poets, and writers of fictitious works are held in England. Prescott and Longfellow are at least as much admired abroad as at home. This sentiment is quite strong at the present time, and there is every disposition to strengthen and preserve it."

Lord Macaulay remarks to us, in a letter received since Mr. Prescott's death,

"I had as great a regard for Mr. Prescott as for any man of whom I knew so little, and I think very highly of his works."

Sir Archibald Alison writes us, (Glasgow, June 4, 1859,)

"Mr. Prescott was by far the first historian of America, and he may justly be assigned a place beside the very greatest of modern Europe. To the indispensable requisites of such an author—industry, candour, and impartiality—he united ornamental qualities of the highest grade—a mind stored with various and elegant learning, a poetical temperament, and great, it may almost be said unrivalled, pictorial powers. These great qualities appeared not less strongly in his last production, the History of the Reign of Philip the Second, than in the earlier works—the History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, the History of The Conquest of Mexico, and the History of the Conquest of Peru, which won for him his world-wide fame. The death of such a man, in the prime of life, and in the meridian of his powers, is a loss not to his country alone, but to the whole human race, to whom his beautiful writings will always prove a source of instruction and enjoyment."

Especially would we refer the reader—should the hopes of the public not be disappointed—to a work understood to be in course of preparation,—Memoirs of the Life of Wm. H. Prescott, by George Ticknor, LL.D. (P.S. See TICKNOR, GEORGE, LL.D., No. 9.) But we promised to touch upon two other heads before we concluded this article; and that promise—partially performed already—we proceed to fulfil.

PRESCOTT'S CHARACTERISTICS AS AN AUTHOR.

"At the moment of terminating this analysis of an episode of the great work [Philip II., see supra] of Mr. Prescott, the intelligence reaches me of his sudden death at Boston, at an age when so many and useful labours might still have been hoped for from him. I am ignorant whether he has been able to terminate the work for which he had so conscientiously prepared himself. Few historians, indeed, have evinced such praiseworthy scrupulousness in the composition of their writings. Far from starting with a system laid down a priori, and making the facts he had to deal with bend to it, Mr. Prescott thought that the first duty of a historian was to assemble all its existing documents, classifying and purifying them by a severe criticism, and to employ all his efforts for the discovery of truth. Like Augustin Thierry, he surmounted, by the force of his will, obstacles which seemed almost invincible and to exclude him from the researches of the historian. . . . Of a just and upright spirit, he had a horror of paradox. He never allowed himself to be drawn away by it, and often condemned himself to long investigation to refute even the most audacious assertions. His criticism, full at once of good sense and acuteness, was never deceived in the choice of documents, and his discernment is as remarkable as his good faith. If he may be reproached with often hesitating, even after a long investigation, to pronounce a definitive judgment, we must at least acknowledge that he omitted nothing to prepare the way for it, and that the author, too timid perhaps to decide, always leaves his reader sufficiently instructed to need no other guide."—M. PROSPER MÉRIMÉ, Revue des Deux Mondes, tome xx., 1859, 600

"As a writer, Mr. Prescott occupies a distinguished place in the first rank of English historians. His fidelity and industry—qualities which form the foundation of historical merit—are universally acknowledged. It has been doubted, and it is doubtful, whether his powers of philosophical analysis were equal to his inusurmountable arrangement,—whether he could penetrate to vital principles as happily as he could marshal facts and picture events. It is certain that the latter portions of the duty of an historian were those to which he specially applied himself. His practice may be justified on the ground of the subdivision of literary labour which at present obtains, greatly to the advantage of the accuracy of our knowledge. To describe clearly what was done in a particular age, and how it was done, is in itself an important and difficult task, to show why it was done, by discovering the hidden causes which shaped and coloured events, belongs perhaps more properly to writers who take a more comprehensive view of the chart of the world's history. In the art of narrative Mr. Prescott had few rivals—very few equals—in our language. So pure and idiomatic is his English that it is rarely indeed that the most critical ear detects, in the use of a word or the construction of a phrase, the transatlantic origin of the writer. Mr. Prescott's chapters on manners and literature are not less lively and picturesque than his record of contemporary events which these chapters illustrate. Of modern historians he was one of the first to acknowledge and to exhibit the importance of this kind of illustration, which his immediate predecessors had been too much in the habit of neglecting. In another respect also his works set an example well worthy of general adoption. Not content with embodying the result of his own researches, he constructed a road to the fountains from which he had drawn and the mines in which he had toiled, in order, to use his own words, 'to put the reader in a position for judging for himself, and thus for revising, and, if need be, of reversing, the judgments of the historian.'"—WM. STIRLING, Encyc. Brit., ut supra, 506, 507

"He has a high sense of the obligation of an historian to explore every source of information relating to his subject, to spare neither industry, nor, we may add, expense, in the collection of his materials."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1843, 188. See, also, Lon. Times, Jan. 12, 1857.

"Truth was his first aim, as far as he could detect it in the conflicting records of events, and his next aim was to impress this truth, in its genuine colours, upon the reader. The characters and motives of men were weighed in the scales of justice, as they appeared to him after careful research and mature thought. In all these qualities of an accomplished historian, we may safely challenge for him a comparison with any other writer."—JARED SPARKS, Proceedings Mass. Hist. Soc., &c., Feb. 1, 1859, 11.

"It is a saying that 'the style is the man;' and of no great author in the literature of the world is that saying more true than of him whose loss we mourn. For in the transparent simplicity and undimmed beauty and candour of his style were read the endearing qualities of his soul, so that his personal friends are found wherever literature is known, and the love for him is co-extensive with the world of letters,—not limited to those who speak our Anglo-Saxon mother-language, to the literature of which he has contributed such splendid works, but co-extensive with the civilized languages of the human race."—C. C. FELTON: Ibid., 27.

"So long as in ages far distant, and not only in countries now refined and polished, but in those not yet brought into the domain of civilization, the remarkable epoch which he has described shall attract the attention of men; so long as the consolidation of the Spanish monarchy, and the expulsion of the Moors, the mighty theme of the discovery of America, the sorrowful glories of Columbus, the mail-clad forms of Cortez and Pizarro and the other grim conquistadores, trampling new found empires under the hoofs of their cavalry, shall be subjects of literary interest; so long as the blood shall curdle at the cruelties of Alva, and the fierce struggle of the Moslem in the East,—so long will the writings of our friend be read."—EDWARD EVERETT, Ibid., 50.

"The excellence of his productions is, in part, transparent to every reader. Compare what he has written with the most of what others have left on the same subjects, and Prescott's superiority beams upon you from the contrast. The easy flow of his language, and the faultless lucidity of his style, may make the reader forget the unremitting toil which the narrative has cost, but the critical inquirer sees everywhere the fruits of investigation rigidly and most perseveringly pursued, and an impartiality and soundness of judgment which give authority to every statement and weight to every conclusion."—GEORGE BANCROFT, Proceedings New York Hist. Soc., Feb. 1, 1859: Prescott Memorial, xiii.

PRESCOTT'S CHARACTERISTICS AS A MAN.

In the consideration of the literary characteristics of Mr. Prescott, we were obliged to omit much which we would have gladly quoted, and in this part of our subject, too, want of space must enforce brevity. To read, that we might write, men's lives, has been our vocation for years. We have seldom found the record so clear, so bright,—we have rarely encountered such touching testimonies of love and reverence to the best qualities of humanity,—as in the present instance. At the solemn convocation of the literary brethren of the deceased,—an assemblage perhaps the most distinguished which the New World has yet seen,—one of his daily associates—one, too, who had known him from his early years—called all who had been equally fortunate to bear witness that, "to those who knew him from the days of his bright boyhood down to his latest years, when he stood before the world crowned with its honours, the elements that constituted the peculiar charm of his character seemed always to be the same, that his life—his whole life—was . . . governed by a prevalent sense of duty to God and love to man, and that he has been taken from us . . . with a heart whose affections grew warmer and more tender to the last."—GEORGE TICKNOR, Proceedings, &c. Mass. Hist. Soc., Feb. 1, 1859, vii. See, also, Ticknor's Hist. of Spanish Literature, Pref., x.

"Of all the men whom I have known," remarked one of his classmates, on the same occasion, "I have never known one so little changed by the conventionalities of society and the hard trial of success and prosperity. At college, and on the morning of the day he died, he was the same in his dispositions, the same in his outward manners, the same in his habits of thought and feeling, the same, to a remarkable degree, even in his attitudes and looks. It was because his character was a true and real character. . . . He was one of the happy few whom all love to hear praised. . . . The shadow of death is upon us, but it is a beautiful and accomplished life which we are called to consider, and it will do us good to ponder it well."—REV. DR. WALKER, President of Harvard University.

"I know not in what words to speak of Prescott. He was my oldest friend,—the last friend of my boyhood. Our fathers were intimate friends, and their intimacy fell to us as an inheritance. His genial face, and that cordial manner which was but the transparent vesture of his constant kindness, I shall meet no more. . . . Nor need I add my testimony to the universal recognition of the ability, the industry, the accurate learning, the admirable judgment, and the perfect taste which have placed him at the head of our literature and made him our pride."—THEOPHILUS PARSONS, LL.D., Law Professor Harvard University, Memoir of Chief-Justice Parsons, 1859, 187.

"All who knew him will say he was himself greater and better than his writings. While his histories prove him to have felt that he owed his time to the service of mankind, every thing about him marked him out to be the most beloved of companions, and the life and joy and pride of society. . . . Standing as it were by his grave, we cannot recall any thing in his manner, his character, his endowments, or his conduct that we could wish changed."—GEORGE BANCROFT, Prescott Memorial, xiv.

Such is the testimony (and much more is before us) of intimate and life-long associates, and those who saw him every day, and all day, confirm the truth of the record.

"The distinguishing traits of Mr. Prescott's personal character—it is his private secretary, Mr. Robert H. Carter, who thus writes—"were all agreeable ones. In daily intercourse of the most intimate kind, during a whole year, I never perceived any thing unpleasant in his conduct or disposition. Though not at all diffident, he was singularly modest and unassuming. He had not a particle of arrogance or haughtiness. It required the closest scrutiny to detect that he had any share of the natural vanity of man. Praise did not elate him, nor censure disturb him. He read all the criticisms upon his works, favourable and unfavourable, and was always eager to profit by any suggestions of improvement. . . . Of Mr. Prescott's benevolence to the suffering and the destitute—a benevolence, however, which is almost a universal characteristic in the highest class of Boston society—I could cite many striking instances, if it were proper to speak of private affairs. . . . He carried his kindness of disposition not only into his public but into his private writings. In the hundreds of letters, many of the most confidential character, treating freely of other authors, and of a great variety of persons, which I wrote at his dictation, not a single unkind or harsh or sneering expression occurs. He would write as thing of a man which he would not say to his face. He would not flatter; and, if he could not honestly praise, he said nothing. He was very warmly attached to his friends, and constant in his attachments, and would never permit any thing to be said against them in their absence. . . . Mr Prescott's cheerfulness and amiability were truly admirable. He had a finely-wrought, sensitive organization; he was high-spirited, courageous, resolute, independent, was free from cant or affectation of any sort. Yet no annoyance, great or small, the most painful illness or the most intolerable bore, could disturb his equanimity or render him in the least degree sullen, or fretful, or discourteous. He was always gay, good-humoured, and manly; most gentle and affectionate to his family, most kind and gracious to all around him. This made him a peculiarly delightful companion; and I look to the year I passed in his service as the most agreeable in my life."—Prescott Memorial, xxiii., xxiv

Well, therefore, is it affirmed by his distinguished foreign biographer—also a personal friend of the subject of his interesting sketch,—

"His eminence as a writer was not more cordially recognized than the remarkable worth and beauty of his character as a man. . . . Adored by his family and familiar friends, he was hardly less esteemed by the whole society of his native city. In his success, literary and social, almost every American with whom his friends in Europe conversed, appeared to take a personal interest and to feel an honest pride. Amongst the organs of the press, and at the meetings of various literary societies, his death elicited the most touching expressions of regard and respect from many of the most distinguished of his countrymen. When those who knew and loved Mr Prescott shall have passed away, his memory will still be cherished by his countrymen, not only for the sake of works which will always rank amongst the chief monuments of American literature, but also for the sake of his pure and graceful life, which did honour to his literary calling."—Wm STIRLING Encyc Brit, ubi supra, 506, 507.

In a preceding extract from the sketch from which we have just quoted, Mr Stirling refers to the willingness with which Mr Prescott was wont to "welcome an unknown fellow-labourer to the temple of Fame." Of this nobility of disposition we have a well-told instance in a letter from Mr J Lothrop Motley to Mr Amory, Mr Prescott's brother-in-law, respecting a work noticed on an earlier page. So far from discouraging an enterprise—Mr Motley's projected History of the Rise of the Dutch Republic—which it was feared the prospective author of the Life of Philip the Second might consider an invasion of a portion of his own territory, Mr Prescott urged his visitor "in the warmest and most earnest manner to proceed on the course he had marked out for himself," "wished him every success, and stated that if there were any books in his library bearing on his subject they were entirely at his service." "You may not remember the circumstances, which, however, I have often mentioned to you," remarks Mr Motley to his correspondent; "but, when I forget them, I hope that my right hand may forget its cunning." "You know," he continues, "how kindly he always spoke of and to me; and the generous manner in which, without the slightest hint from me, and entirely unexpected by me, he attracted the eyes of his hosts of readers to my forthcoming work, by so handsomely alluding to it in the preface to his own [Philip the Second] must be almost as fresh in your memory as it is in mine." See Proceed Mass. Hist Soc, 1858-60, 266, 431.

Here we take up the story greatly impressed with the merits of Mr Motley's History, and anxious to do justice to those merits in this volume, when about recording the judgments of eminent critics on the Rise of the Dutch Republic, we asked Mr Prescott for his opinion of a work which, in advance of its completion, he had so courteously introduced to the public. His cordial response has been already recorded on a preceding page: see MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHPROP, p 1380.

Something more we would have said respecting this characteristic trait of Mr Prescott, of the graceful and gracious manner in which, in the maturity of his well-earned honours and world-wide fame, the historian of two hemispheres would encourage the unknown aspirant to literary honours to perseverance in the struggle of honourable ambition,—in efforts designed to enlarge the domain of useful knowledge, or to record, for the benefit of later generations, the achievements of science and the triumphs of letters, ("alas! we feel we are no actors here!") something we could have said drawn from our own experience.

Even this imperfect and faltering testimony may be deemed scarcely delicate; but we had rather that others should accuse of ostentation than that our own heart should convict us of ingratitude. Of the friendly and lively interest evinced from the first, by the departed, in the labours of one who had no claim upon his consideration, we trust we shall never cease to be mindful.

Thus, loving and beloved, happy and bestowing happiness, in life, he is honoured and lamented in death, and his name shall be held in grateful remembrance in all future generations. Had his family given only him to the Republic, it had seen much; but so long as the sword, the ermine, and the pen are connected with the story of American civilization, so long shall the memory of three generations of Prescotts be dear to the hearts of the American people.

Price, Richard, D.D., 1723-1791, a native of the parish of Llangeinor, Glamorganshire, was educated in Wales and at Coward's Dissenting Academy, London; chaplain to Mr. Streetfield, Stoke Newington, 1743-56, also assisting Dr. Chandler at the Old Jewry, and other preachers; married Miss Blundell, 1757, and settled at Hackney; subsequently removed to Newington Green, where he resided until 1786, when, on the death of his wife, he returned to Hackney, next chosen afternoon preacher at the meeting-house in Poor Jewry Street, but resigned this post on being elected pastor of the Gravel-pit Meeting, Hackney, and afternoon preacher at Newington Green, resigned these charges with a farewell sermon, February, 1791, and died April 19 of same year. For two years (1786-88) he was a mathematical tutor in the Dissenting Academy at Hackney. In his theological sentiments he was a semi Arian or low Arian. His services to the cause of American Independence elicited in 1778 an invitation from Congress, through Dr. Franklin and others, to "come and reside among a people who knew how to appreciate his talents." This overture, based upon the promise of a liberal provision, in consideration of his past and prospective labours in the cause of freedom, was not accepted. He also pub. a number of papers on the doctrine of chances, (see Lubbock's Essay on Probability), annuities, duration of life, transit of Venus, &c., in Phil. Trans., 1764-76. He had a correspondence with Dr. Priestley, pub. by the latter, in 1778, under the title of A Free Discussion of the Doctrine of Materialism and Philosophical Necessity, in a Correspondence between Dr. Price and Dr. Priestley.

"In his controversy with Priestley particularly he showed how strongly he viewed the philosophical aberration of the age, and how earnestly he desired to place moral and metaphysical truth upon its deeper and truer foundation. Almost the only writer of this [the rationalistic] school whose works are likely to form a part of our standard philosophy, is Dr. Richard Price"—MORILL. See No. 1.

In this high estimate of the merits of Price's philosophical writings, Mr. Morell is not singular.

"He investigated with acuteness and ability many important questions relative to morals, and controverted the doctrine of a Moral Sense, as irreconcilable with the unalterable character of moral ideas, which, as well as those of Substance and Cause, he maintained to be eternal and original principles of the intellect itself, independent of the Divine Will"—TENNENAN ut supra.

"If in England you only look at London in the eighteenth century, you will doubtless see little else than sensualism. But even at London you would find, by the side of Priestley Price, that ardent friend of liberty, that ingenious and profound economist, who renewed and brilliantly sustained the Platonic idealism of Cadworth. I know that Price is an isolated phenomenon at London, but the whole Scotch school is more or less spiritualistic"—COVINE. ut supra.

But Mackintosh (ut supra) by no means shares in this enthusiasm, nor can it be expected that the admirers of Locke should discover much merit in his opponent. Sir James's estimate of the characteristics of Price will be found in the Edinburgh Review, June, 1815, 171-172, and has been already cited: see MORGAN, WILLIAM, No. 3, also Nos. 1 and 2. Morgan's Memoirs of Price are also noticed in London Monthly Review, lxxxiii. 77, and Boston Christian Discip., ii. 134. Although unfortunate in his grand panacea for financial consumption,—the famous Sinking-Fund scheme, (see Edin. Rev., xxxix.

32-34, GALE, S.: HAMILTON, ROBERT, LL.D., No. 3.) Price alleges that Pitt selected the worst of the three schemes he offered him,—his stoutness as a political arithmetician is not to be questioned. His personal character was most exemplary, (see Mrs. Chapone's Miscellanies), and his controversial manners a model to zealous disputants.

The historian of the Roman Empire, in writing to Lord Sheffield respecting the French Revolutionists of 1789, thus refers to our zealous advocate of political and religious freedom:

"The honestest of the Assembly, a set of wild visionaries like our Dr. Price"—Gibbon's Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 181.

Price, Thomas. The Life, Voyages, and Adventures of Banfylde Moore Carew, Lon., 8vo.

Price, Thomas, 1787-1848, a native of Brecknockshire, educated at the College of Brecknock; was ordained in 1812, for thirteen years performed the duties of curacies about Crickhowel, and in 1825 received the vicarage of Cwmdru, which he retained until his death. He was a devoted student of Welsh literature, and did much to endear it at home and recommend it abroad. He pub. in 1829, 8vo, An Essay on the Physiognomy and Phylology of the Present Inhabitants of Britain, with Reference to their Origin as Goths and Celts. His principal work is the Hanes Cymru a chenedl y Cymry or cynoesodd hyd at Furwlaeth Llewelyn ap Gruffydd, (History of Wales and the Welsh Nation from the Early Ages to the Death of Llewelyn ap Gruffydd), when the country was united with England. His history (which should be in connection with the histories of Wales in English by Warrington and Woodman) was issued in fourteen numbers, (about 800 pages in all,) 1836-42. Another work of Mr. Price's, which attracted considerable attention, was The Geographical Progress of Empire and Civilization, (Llandovery, 1847-48,) a portion of which appeared in the London Athenæum for 1844, (see Nos. 894, 895,) and was republished in the Allgemeine Zeitung. A notice of this work will be found in the Athenæum for 1847, 1051. He contributed, chiefly under the signature of Carnhuanawc, to fifteen Welsh periodicals, and warmly encouraged the Eisteddfods, or literary and musical gatherings of his countrypeople. Of his English works the most important will be found in vol. i. (1854) of the Literary Remains of Rev. Thomas Price, with a Memoir of his Life, by Jane Williams, Ygafell, Llandovery, 2 vols. 8vo. Vol. ii. (1855) is occupied with Miss Williams's Memoir, which—and the first volume also—every one interested in Welsh literature (the number of such is disgracefully small in Great Britain) should peruse. Vol. i. is briefly noticed in the Athenæum, 1854, 1587, and in the Literary Gazette, 1854, 905; and vol. ii. in Lon. Athen., 1855, 1331, and Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1855, 773. A memoir of Mr. Price will be found in London Gent. Mag., Feb. 1849, 212. So long as the Eisteddfods of Wales are sustained,—and may that be forever!—so long will the memory of Carnhuanawc (Man of the Sunny Mount) be had in grateful remembrance.

3 and 5, and an Essay on the Origin of Taste, and much additional matter, by Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, Bart., great merit, both as regards matter and manner, although it is thought that Dugald Stewart (Philosophical Essays) has successfully attacked some of Price's positions.

"Ethnology may be now regarded as established on a purely inductive basis. The 'Races of Man' must be taken into account in all future historical investigations, as supplying the facts from which are derived the most certain and simple principles under which the manifold phenomena of history may be reduced and classified."—Dublin University Magazine

"Dr Prichard, in his valuable and learned Researches into the Physical History of Mankind, &c."—A. H. LAYARD, DCL Nineveh and its Remains, ed 1849 ii 241, n

"Dr Prichard, in his great work on the Natural History of Man, has constructed a powerful and conclusive argument for the derivation of the whole human species from one stock. If the unity of the race is not to be made out genealogically because profane history does not ascend so high as to meet the historical narrative of Moses in reference to Gentile nations, he demonstrates that unity by the fact that it is essential to the nature of man."—REV H. TULLIDOR Triumphs of the Bible, 1863, 175

Dr Prichard also contributed to the Manual of Scientific Inquiry, (see HIRSCHL, SIR JOHN FREDERICK WILLIAM, D C L, No 6,) to the Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine, the Library of Medicine, Phil. Mag., Thom. Ann. Philos., Reports Brit. Assoc., Proceed Zool Soc, Geog Soc Jour., &c. A biographical sketch of this learned and excellent man will be found in Lon Gent. Mag., Feb 1849, 208, and another, by Dr Symmons, of Bristol, is referred to in the Lon Quar. Rev, Dec 1849, 3, n.

"His various writings, directed to topics of the deepest interest to all mankind, are characterized by an industry, ability, and candour of research well meriting the reputation they have obtained both at home and abroad."—Lon Quar Rev, Dec 1849, 1.

Le Clerc pub. a critical examination of it, which appeared in English, Lon., 1722, 8vo. The Connection "contains a large mass of erudition and accurate information on every topic of Jewish history and antiquities, and on all the links which connected that peculiar people with the surrounding nations. It is indispensable to the biblical and interesting to the general scholar. Le Clerc's exceptions are not of great importance"—Orme's Bibl. Bib

"Full of information, accurate and valuable Shuckford and Russell with inferior judgment"—Bickersteth's C. S., 422.

Orme (supra) considers Shuckford's Connection (Russell was not then published) "not equal in talent or interest to Prideaux." See, also, notices of Prideaux's Connection, by Thos. Gordon, in Cato's Letters, and in Gibbon's Decline and Fall, 969, n., Miscell. Works, 20.

An eminent critic remarks of Jahn's History of the Hebrew Commonwealth, (see STOWE, CALVIN E., D.D., No. 1.)

"The design of this work is to impart a succinct and critically arranged history of the Hebrews, from their first rise in Abraham down to the destruction of Jerusalem. We have no book in our language which does this in such a manner as to satisfy the wants of a critical student at the present time. The works of Shuckford and Prideaux, which in respect to learning may be mentioned with approbation, particularly the latter, are so copious and contain so much irrelevant matter that the student goes through them with toil and little fruit of his labour"—Moses Stuart

Priestley, Joseph, LL.D., March 13, 1733-Feb. 6, 1804, a native of Birstal-Fieldhead, six miles southwest of Leeds, Yorkshire, England, where his father was a cloth-dresser, on the death of his mother was adopted in his sixth year by a paternal aunt, Miss Keighley, who placed him at a free grammar-school, where he acquired an elementary knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages, to which he added the Hebrew, French, Italian and German. In 1752 he entered the Dissenting Academy at Daventry, (afterwards Coward College.) in 1755 became minister to a congregation at Needham-Market, Suffolk, from 1758 to 1761 officiated as minister and schoolmaster at Nantwich, Cheshire, from 1761 to 1767 was tutor in the languages and belles-lettres at Warrington Academy, in 1767 became pastor of Mill-Hill Chapel, Leeds; from 1773 to 1780 was librarian and literary companion to the Earl of Shelburne, (afterwards first Marquis of Lansdowne,) at a salary of £250 and a retiring pension for life of £150, and in 1780 became minister to the principal Dissenting congregation at Birmingham. In 1790 he irritated the populace by his Familiar Letters to the Inhabitants of Birmingham, advocating the claims of the Dissenters; and in 1791 he again aroused public animosity by his justification of the French Revolution in his Letters to Edmund Burke, occasioned by Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France. The 14th of July in the last-named year was observed by Priestley's friends—he was not himself present at the entertainment—by a festival in commemoration of the destruction of the Bastille. The dinner-party was disturbed by a mob which destroyed the tavern, and the next day many edifices were pillaged and burnt. Of course Priestley's chapel and house were prominent objects of attack. The politician and his family escaped, (by flight.) but his library, manuscripts, and philosophical apparatus were scattered to the winds.

"The law which those men of change and mischief would have extinguished, gave them compensation for the losses which nothing but their insults to all law had caused. . . Priestley swelled his claim to £4122. A jury, after a long and impartial examination during a trial of nine years, contemptuously cut down the claim to little more than one-half, £22502."—Blackw. Mag., Sept 1836, 364

"The compensation which he obtained fell short, according to his own account, by £2000 of his loss. As, however, an ample subscription was made for him, and as his brother-in-law generously gave him £10,000, with an annuity of £200 for life, he could not be other than a large gainer by the execrable violence of which he had been the victim, and, as he never allowed any of his writings to remain unpublished for even the shortest time after they were finished, it is not likely that any loss of an irreparable kind was incurred by the burning of his papers."—LORD BROUGHAM Lives of Philosophers of the Time of George III., ed. 1856, 83-84 Priestley

"Every man of sober mind, whilst he commiserated Dr. Priestley as an unfortunate man and esteemed him as a very ingenious one, could view him in no other light than as the victim of his own folly and misguided passions."—DE QUINCEY: Blackw. Mag., June, 1831, 907, and in his Philosophical Writers, ii., Bost., 1854, 262 Dr. Parr

"A banditti, which had been previously stimulated, as it has since been excused and panegyrised, by incendiary libellers, have wreaked their vengeance on a philosopher, illustrious by his talents and his writings, venerable for the spotless purity of his life, and amiable for the unoffending simplicity of his manners."—SIR J. MACINTOSH Defence of the French Revolution Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, iii. 170 See, also, The Traditional Policy of the Times, Manches., 1864, 8vo

Priestley now removed to Hackney, where he succeeded his friend Dr. Richard Price (supra) in the pastoral office, and also in the post of Principal of the Hackney Academy. His situation, however, did not prove an agreeable one, and in 1794 he determined to follow his sons, who had settled in America. He arrived at New York on the 4th of June of that year, declined the professorship of chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, in July settled at Northumberland, Pennsylvania, where he assisted his son in farming 300 acres of land, and here chiefly resided, making occasional excursions to Philadelphia and other places, until his death in 1804. He declined the offer of $1000 for a course of Lectures on Experimental Philosophy to be delivered in Philadelphia, but often preached in that city, and occasionally at Northumberland. In 1796 and 1797 he delivered in Philadelphia two Series of Discourses relating to the Evidences of Revealed Religion, which were pub. in that city in the same years in 2 volumes 8vo, (one of these was dedicated to John Adams.) and in 1797 he pub. at Phila. a 12mo tract of 38 pages, entitled Outline of the Evidences of Revealed Religion.

"In America he again suffered considerable disappointment. His religion was too much for those who had ceased to care for sacred things, and far too scanty for those who still were Christians,—while his republican opinions were exceedingly distasteful, because they were tinged with a decided admiration for France. We find his leanings are all against the Federal party, and his censures of the great Chief of the Union little concealed. He felt for the Democratic party, the French alliance, the enemies of English partialities, and he regarded Washington as ungrateful because he would not, from a recollection of the services of France twenty years before to American independence, consent to make America dependent upon France"—LORD BROUGHAM ubi supra, 84, 87

In 1794 appeared Observations on the Emigration of Dr. Priestley, and on the Several Addresses delivered to him on his Arrival at New York, Phila., 8vo, Lon., 8vo, and in 1795 was pub., in New York, A Twig of Birch for a Butting Calf, or, Strictures upon Remarks on the Emigration of Dr. Joseph Priestley by a Brother of the Birch, 8vo. Of Dr. Priestley's publications, which amount to no less than 141 in number, (in one year 10,) a complete list (the one in the Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1804, 375-378, and that in Watt's Bibl. Brit. are imperfect) will be found in vol. ii., 537-544, of Rutt's Collection of his Theological and Miscellaneous Works, (excluding the Scientific,) Hackney, 1817-32, (new title-page, 1824,) 26 vols. 8vo, 250 copies printed at £15 15s. Vols. i. and ii. are taken up with his Life and Correspondence, and these (1832) can be had separately. These two volumes consist in part of the Memoirs of Dr. Joseph Priestley to the Year 1795, written by Himself; with a Continuation to the Time of his Decease, by his son, Joseph Priestley, and Observations on his Writings, by Thomas Cooper, President Judge of the Fourth District of Pennsylvania, and the Reverend William Christie, Northumberland, 1806, 2 vols. 8vo, Lon., 1805-07, 2 vols. 8vo, with additions, and Priestley's Correspondence, contributed by Mr. Rutt:

"Edited [the Works, ut supra] by the affectionate care of amiable and worthy man."—LORD BROUGHAM. Philosophers, &c., 74, n

Of the Memoirs, a review by Lord Jeffrey will be found in the Edinburgh Review, Oct. 15 8, 136-161. That portion of the Review which combats Priestley's Doctrine of Materialism was republished in Jeffrey's Contributions to Edinburgh Review, 1853, 630-636.

"The Memoirs are written with great conciseness and simplicity, and present a very singular picture of that indefatigable activity, that bigoted vanity, that precipitation, cheerfulness, and sincerity, which made up the character of this restless philosopher. . . The Continuation by his son is more diffuse and languid, though the detail of his father's last days be interesting and satisfactory. . . The Observations annexed by Mr Cooper are the work, we think, of a powerful, presumptuous, and untractable understanding. They are written in a delving, dogmatical, unaccommodating style, with much force of reasoning for the most part, but often with great rashness and arrogance, and occasionally with a cant of philosophism, and a tang of party politics, which communicate an air of vulgarity to the whole work, and irresistibly excite a smile at the expense of this magnanimous despiser of all sorts of prejudice and bigotry."—LORD JEFFREY Edin Rev, Oct. 1806, 136, 141.

See COOPER, THOMAS, M.D., LL.D.

"I have just read Priestley's Life of himself. It is an honest, plain, and somewhat dry account of a well-spent life."—SIR J. MACINTOSH, Sept 13, 1807. Life, i, chap vii

As regards his works,

"He is one of the most voluminous writers of any age or country, and probably he is of all voluminous writers the one who has the fewest readers."—Lord Brougham's Philosophers, &c, 74

See No. 7. It was trans. into several foreign languages, and gained him admission into the Royal Society. The design was communicated by the author to Franklin personally in London, and the latter undertook to supply Priestley with the necessary books. In less than a year after this conversation Priestley sent Franklin a copy of his history in print.

"Though somewhat tame and tedious, it is intelligent, clear, and judicious"—LORD JEFFREY Edin Rev, ix 152

"Carelessly written"—THOMAS THOMSON, M D

"It is a careless and superficial work, hastily written, as is his 'History of Vision,' [No 11, infra], and the original experiments afforded no new information of any value"—LORD BROUGHAM Philos, &c, 72

"It is justly deemed a valuable performance, and its original experiments are allowed to be very ingenious"—Encyc. Brit, 9th ed, xviii, 1859, 614

HORSLEY, SAMUEL, LL.D.

"Some parts of this work have been animadverted on in a very able manner by Dr. Horsley [in Monthly Review] and others, nor has Dr Priestley been backward in his replies, [1783, 2 vols 8vo, 1784, 8vo, 1786, 8vo]"—BISHOP WATSON.

See, also, ROWLES, SAMUEL, No. 2, VESYR, DANIEL, No. 2.

Priestley, who had in his Letters, No. 28, offered some Animadversions on the two last chapters of the first volume of Gibbon's History, sent a copy of his History of the Corruptions of Christianity, &c. to the historian. The letter which accompanied it displeased the latter, and led to a correspondence between the parties, which Priestley, against Gibbon's protest, most dishonourably, published soon after Gibbon's death, and exhibited before that event. See Gibbon's Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 98, 309-313. Priestley certainly appears to but little advantage in the affair.

"The minister of the gospel had all the heat to himself at least in the layman it was latent, if it existed at all. He was desirous of drawing his adversary into a controversy, and, failing in this, lost his temper, and had the vulgar recourse to calling names and imputing motives. Mr Gibbon may have shown some superciliousness in his treatment of this angry polemic, but he certainly had a good right to marvel at the intolerance of one whose heterodoxy was so universal as to condemn 'worthless' [Gibbon has it] by circumscribing the inspiration of the Evangelists, and to condemn the religion of every Christian nation, as a false less innocent, not less absurd, than Mahomet's journey to the third heaven"—LORD BROUGHAM Philos., &c., 82.

The historian, indeed, would have no "controversy" with the petulant philosopher, but he took a terrible revenge for his impertinence at the close of the 54th chapter of the Decline and Fall he remarks,

"The friends of Christianity are alarmed at the boundless impulse of inquiry and skepticism. The pillars of revelation are shaken by those men who preserve the name without the substance of religion, who indulge the license without the temper of philosophy," and thus in the face of the world he superscribes this formidable indictment

"I shall now recommend to public animadversion two passages in Dr Priestley, which betray the ultimate tendency of his opinions. At the first of these (Hist. of the Corruptions of Christianity, vol. i. p. 275, 276) the priest, at the second (vol. i. p. 484) the magistrate, may tremble!"—Note

See, also, chapter xlvii. Note 5th

The late Mr Gibbon well understood Dr Priestley's character and opinions, and expressed himself strongly on that subject. No man of discernment can see their direct tendency but with reprobation, and sometimes not without fear and horror, (1794)"—Pursuits of Lit. Dialogue the First, Note 12, q v. And see Dialogue the Fourth, Note 158.

"This is modest in the extreme, after the author of the work in question has been convicted again and again of the grossest misrepresentation, the most disgraceful ignorance of Greek, in short, after he has, in the opinion of every impartial and competent judge of ecclesiastical antiquity, received from Bishop Horsley the severest castigation which a rash and arrogant invader of another's province ever received in the fields of controversy"—*Lon. II. PRIESTLEY THE NATURAL PHILOSOPHER.

"To enumerate Dr Priestley's discoveries would in fact be to enter into a detail of most of those that have been made within the last fifteen years. How many invisible fluids whose existence evaded the sagacity of foregoing ages has he made known to us! The very air we breathe he has taught us to analyze, to examine, to improve, a substance so little known that even the precise effect of respiration was an enigma until he explained it. He first made known to us the proper food of vegetables, and in what the difference between these and animal substances consisted. To him pharmacy is indebted for the method of making artificial waters, as well as for a shorter method of preparing other medicines, metallurgy for more powerful and cheap solvents, and chemistry for such a variety of discoveries as it would be tedious to recite,—discoveries which have new-modelled the science, and drawn to it aid to this country the attention of all Europe. It is certain that since the year 1773 the eyes and regards of all the learned bodies of Europe have been directed to this country by his means. In every philosophical treatise his name is to be found, and in almost every page. They all own that most of their discoveries are due either to the reputation of his discoveries or to the hints scattered through his works."—DR RICHARD KIRWAN

"In his scientific career his object was uniformly to question nature by every possible experimental investigation, and to state his results as he obtained them. He laid the basis of the chemistry of the gases, and of those modes of investigation in the pneumatic branch of the science which are still pursued. He discovered a great variety of facts in this department of the science. To him we are indebted for the knowledge of oxygen, binoxide of nitrogen, sulphurous acid, fluosilicic acid, muriatic acid, ammonia, carburetted hydrogen, and carbonic acid."—DR R. D. THOMSON

"Though his chemical experiments were for the most part accurate, they did not exhibit that precise chemical knowledge which distinguished the experiments of some of his contemporaries. He never attempted to discover the constituents of his gases, nor their specific gravity, nor any other numerical result."—DR THOMAS THOMSON

He entered the laboratory with but little preparation. "When I began my experiments," he remarks, "I knew very little of chemistry, and had, in a manner, no idea of the subject before I attended a course of lectures at an academy where I taught."

As late as 1795, the year after his refusal of the professorship of chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, he observes, in a letter,

"As to chemical lectureship, I am now convinced I could not have acquitted myself in it to proper advantage. Though I have made many discoveries in some branches of chemistry, I never gave much attention to the common routine of it, and know but little of the common processes."

"He had great merit in the contrivance of his apparatus, which was simple and neat to a degree that has never been equalled, and the indefatigable industry with which he pursued his researches would entitle him to still higher praise if he had combined with it the patience and forecast by which so much labour may be saved. The truth is, however, that he was always too much occupied with making experiments to have leisure either to plan them beforehand with philosophic precision, or to combine their results afterwards into systematic conclusions. He was so impatient to be doing that he could spare no time for thinking, and erroneously imagined that science was to be forwarded rather by accumulating facts than by meditating on those that were ascertained."—LORD JEFFREY Edin Rev., Oct. 1806, ix. 150.

"On the whole, from Dr Priestley's conversation, and from his writings, one is not much disposed to consider him as a person of first-rate abilities. The activity rather than the force of his genius is the object of admiration. He is indefatigable in making experiments, and he compensates by the numbers of them for the unskillfulness with which they are often contrived. Though little skilled in mathematics, he has written on optics with tolerable success, and though but moderately versed in chemistry, he has done very considerable service to that science."—PROFESSOR JOHN PLAYFAIR

"The merit of Dr. Priestley, as a cultivator of science, was the activity with which he made experiments,—the watchful attention with which he observed every phenomenon, following the minutest circumstances of each process,—the versatility with which he prosecuted each new idea that arose from his trials,—his diligence in recording all the particulars, as if well aware how much depends in every branch of inductive philosophy upon allowing no fact to escape, when we are confessedly in want of light, and can never tell how any given fact may bear on the unknown conclusion to which our analytical process is leading us. As a reasoner, his powers were far less considerable. He possessed not the sound judgment, the large cir. unction, which enables men to weigh the relative value of either reasons or facts."—LORD BROUGHAM Philos., &c., 78, 79. See, also, 70, 75, 76.

III. PRIESTLEY THE MORAL PHILOSOPHER.

"Dr. Priestley's metaphysical creed embraces four leading doctrines: he adopted the theory of vibrations, the association of ideas, the scheme of philosophical necessity, and the soul's materiality. On all these topics he has furnished us with extended dissertations, a.d. who ever opinions may be entertained of any or all of them, there are few persons but will readily admit that the Doctor has displayed both great zeal and great ability in defence of them. . . . Dr Priestley is Dr Reid's most able and popular opponent."—BLACKET. Hist. of Philos. of Kind, iii. 202, 308.

"Both Priestley and Brown strenuously contend against Reid's interpretation of the doctrine of Locke, who states it as that philosopher's opinion 'that images of external objects were conveyed to the brain, but whether he thought with Descartes [lege omnino Dr. Clarke] and Newton, that the images in the brain are perceived by the mind, there present, or that they are imprinted on the mind itself, is not so evident.' This, Brown, Priestley, and others, pronounce a flagrant misrepresentation."—SIR WM. HAMILTON Lects. on Metaphysics, 1859, Lect. XXII.

"Joseph Priestley criticised at the same time both Hume and his antagonists. He may be said to have been more successful with the latter, whose instinctive principles he justly styled qualitates occultæ. In opposition to Hume he alleged a proof of the existence of the Divinity, which was untenable. He was a rank Determinist, and, consistently with his principles, controverted, as Hartley had done, the doctrine of free agency, and endeavoured to establish a system of materialism like that advocated by his predecessor."—TENNEN'S Hist. of Philos., Johnson's trans., 383.

"Neglecting all the presumptions for a future state, afforded by a comparison of the course of human affairs with the moral judgments and moral feelings of the human heart, and overlooking, with the same disdain, the presumptions arising from the narrow sphere of human knowledge, when compared with the indefinite improvement of which our intellectual powers seem to be susceptible, this acute but superficial writer attached himself exclusively to the old and hackneyed pneumatological argument, tacitly assuming as a principle that the future prospects of man depend entirely on the determination of a physical problem, analogous to that which was then dividing chemists about the existence or non-existence of phlogiston. In the actual state of science, these speculations might well have been spared."—DUGALD STEWART Philos. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 58.

"Priestley's mind was objective to an extreme. he could fix his faith upon nothing which had not the evidence of sense in some way or other impressed upon it. Science, morals, politics, philosophy, religion, all came to him under the type of the sensational. The most spiritual ideas were obliged to be cast into a material mould before they could commend themselves to his judgment or conscience. His intellect was rapid to an extraordinary degree, he saw the bearings of a question according to his own principles at a glance, and embodied his thoughts in volumes whilst many other men would hardly have sketched out their plan. All this, though admirable in the man of action, was not the temperament to form the solid metaphysician, nay, it was precisely opposed to that deep reflective habit, that sinking into one's own inmost consciousness, from which alone speculative philosophy can obtain light and advancement."—MORELL'S Hist. of Mod. Philos., i. 142-143.

We have quoted Professor Playfair's opinion of Priestley as a natural philosopher. This eminent scholar continues.

"If we view him as a critic, a metaphysician, and a divine, we must confine ourselves to a more scanty praise. In his controversy with Dr Reid, though he has said many things that are true, he has shown himself wholly incapable of understanding the principal point in debate, and when he affirmed [see HARTLEY, DAVID, M.D. p. 795, ante] that the vague and unsatisfactory speculations of Hartley have thrown as much light on the nature of man as the reasonings of Sir Isaac Newton did on the nature of the body, he can hardly be allowed to understand in what true philosophy consists. As to his theology, it is enough to say that he denies the immateriality of the soul, though he contends for its immortality and ranges himself on the side of Christianity. These inconsistencies and absurdities will perhaps deprive him of the name of a philosopher, but he will still merit the name of a useful and diligent experimenter."

PRIESTLEY THE MAN.

"His character is a matter of no doubt, and it is of a high order. That he was a most able, most industrious, most successful student of nature is clear, and that his name will forever be held in grateful remembrance by all who cultivate physical science, and placed among those of its most eminent masters, is unquestionable. That he was a perfectly conscientious man in all the opinions which he embraced, and sincere in all he published respecting other subjects, appears equally beyond dispute. He was also upright and honourable in all his dealings, and justly beloved by his family and friends as a man spotless in all the relations of life. That he was governed in his public conduct by a temper too hot and irritable to be consistent either with his own dignity or with an amiable deportment, may be freely admitted, and his want of self-command, and want of judgment in the practical affairs of life, was manifest above all in his controversial history, for he can be charged with no want of prudence in the management of his private concerns. His violence and irritability, too, seem equally to have been confined to his public life, for in private all have allowed him the praise of a mild and attractive demeanour, and we have just seen [interview with a Calvinistic divine in Pennsylvania] its great power in disarming the prejudices of his adversaries."—LORD BROUGHAM Philos., &c., 80-90. See, also, 69, 85, 86.

"In the domestic relations of life he was uniformly kind and affectionate, his parental feelings were those of the tenderest and best of fathers, and not even malice itself could ever fix a stain upon his private conduct, or impeach his integrity."—DR. Aikin quoted in Encyc. Brit., 9th ed., xviii., 1859, Life of Priestley.

"I have lived much among the friends of Priestley, and learned "from them many peculiar opinions of that man, who speaks all he thinks. No man has studied Christianity more, or believes it more sincerely."—ROBERT SOUTHBY, to John May, June 26, 1797. Southey's Life and Correspondence, chap. v

"Dr Priestley, after he had adjoined the Holy Ghost, and satisfied himself that Jesus Christ was nothing more than a man, that the scriptural writers were no more inspired than himself, and that the soul of man had no existence, retained the same devout passion for preaching, praying, and catechising, which he acquired while he believed in the Trinity and the immateriality of the sentient principle of his nature. We have already said that we believe him to have been sincere in the singular profession of faith which he promulgated, and therefore we are constrained to respect his endeavours to confirm and recommend it. But it is impossible not to regret the presumption and infatuation by which he seems to have been guided, and we are afraid that the theological speculations of a man of great learning, sagacity, industry, and devotion, are at this day an offence to the serious, and a jest to the profane."—LORD JARVIS, Edin. Rev., Oct. 1806, ix. 137, 161

"Priestley was a good man, though his life was too busy to leave him leisure for that refinement and ardour of moral sentiment which have been felt by men of less blameless life. Frankness and disinterestedness in the avowal of his opinion were his point of honour. In other respects his morality was not brilliant. But the virtue of the sentimental moralist is so over-precarious and ostentatious, that he can seldom be entitled to look down with contempt on the steady though homely morals of the household."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH, Sept. 13, 1807, Life, i, chap. vii

Dr. Johnson's verdict on Priestley's theological writings has been already cited in this article. His opinion of his probity and learning will be found in our notice of Rev. Samuel Badoek, (p. 98, ante.) and an amusing instance of the triumph of the lexicographer's candour over his prejudices with respect to the same obnoxious philosopher is recorded in the 77th chapter of Boswell's memoir. Mathias's unfavourable comments (in Pursuits of Lit., Dialogue First, &c.) have also been already noticed in this article. A lively sketch of Priestley as a man, a theologian, and a philosopher occurs in the London Quarterly Review for Dec. 1812, 425-431, and one far less temperate in tone appeared in Blackwood's Magazine for Sept. 1835, 362-365. From the latter we quote a few lines more commendable for vigour of style than politeness of language.

"A man frenzied for novelty, ambitious of a name, precipitate in the publication of every change of a capricious mind, and utterly careless of the mischief effected by his unprincipled notions. As a scholar shallow, as a philosopher empirical, as a politician malcontent, and as a religionist heretical, he has long since sunk into the contempt which every man of sense feels for pretensions without solidity, and the desire of public mischief defeated only by giddy impotence of mind."—362. See, also, Blackw. Mag., April, 1839, *482.

Who would believe, save one whose business it is to find all that has been said on both sides of a question, that this is the man whom the learned editor of Bellen-den thus eulogizes?

"Let not his attainments be depreciated, because they are numerous without a parallel, let not his talents be ridiculed, because they are superlatively great, let not his morals be vilified, because they are correct without austerity, and exemplary without ostentation, because they present, even to common observers, the innocence of a hermit and the simplicity of a patriarch, and because a philosophic eye will at once discover in them the deep-fixed root of virtuous principle and the solid trunk of virtuous habit."—Dr. Parr's Letter from Irenopolis.

The eloquent commendation of Robert Hall will have more weight with most readers than the eulogy just quoted.

"The religious tenets of Dr Priestley appear to me erroneous in the extreme; but I should be sorry to suffer any difference of sentiment to diminish my sensibility to virtue or my admiration of genius. His enlightened and active mind his unwearied assiduity, the extent of his researches, the light he poured into almost every department of science, will be the admiration of that period, when the greater part of those who have favoured or those who have opposed him will be alike forgotten. Distinguished merit will ever rise superior to oppression, and will draw lustre from reproach. The vapours which gather round the rising sun, and follow in its course, seldom fall at the close of it to form a magnificent theatre for its reception, and to invest with variegated tints, and with a softened effulgence, the luminary which they cannot hide."

For this admirable evidence of generous candour Mr. Hall did not escape censure, and of this he was informed by an acquaintance in the course of conversation, (see Gardiner's Music and Friends.) the great man listened to the grave indictment, and thus answered it in a spirit which will be honoured so long as bigotry is sensible of shame, or charity holds alliance with virtue.

"Dr. Priestley, it is acknowledged, was a Socinian, but it was not under that character he was eulogized. It was as the friend of liberty, the victim of intolerance, and the author of some of the most brilliant philosophical discoveries of modern times, for which he was celebrated throughout Europe, and his name enrolled as a member of the most illustrious institutions, so that my eulogy was but a feeble echo of the applause which resounded from every civilized portion of the globe. And are we suddenly fallen back into the darkness and ignorance of the middle ages, during which the spell of a stupid and unfeeling uniformity bound the nations in iron slumber, that it is become a crime to praise a man for talents which the whole world admire, and for virtues which his enemies confessed, merely because his religious creed was erroneous? If any thing could sink orthodoxy into contempt, it would be its association with such gothic barbarity of sentiment, such reptile manners."

In 1860 a committee was formed for the erection of a portrait-statue of Dr Priestley among the distinguished men of science in the corridor of the new museum at Oxford.

Prime, A. J., M.D., son of Nathaniel S. Prime, D.D., (infra), b. on Long Island, 1810, graduated at Williams College, Mass., 1829, is a frequent contributor to periodicals. He is known as a zealous student of Natural History.

Prime, Benjamin Young, M.D., 1733-1791, a native of Huntington, Long Island, a son of Rev. Ebenezer Prime, graduated at Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. Jersey, 1751, and subsequently took his medical degree at Leyden, on which occasion he delivered a Dissertation in Latin, which was pub. there in 4to. He subsequently wrote essays, &c., in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, and Spanish, and many Revolutionary songs and ballads which circulated widely during the war. Among his publications were: 1. The Patriot Muse, or, Poems on some of the Principal Events of the Late War, &c., by an American, Lon., 1764, 8vo. 2. Columbia's Glory, or, British Pride Humbled: a Poem on the American Revolution, (N. York,) 1791. Recently a collection of some of his pieces in various languages has been pub., viz. 3 Muscipula Cambyromachia, Newburgh, 1838. The principal Latin poem in this vol. is probably not Dr. Prime's, but the translation is doubtless his work. See Griswold's Curiosities of Amor. Lit., Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., i. 433-434; Sprague's Annals, Presbyterian, iii., 1858, 31-32.

Prime, Ebenezer, 1700-1779, father of the preceding, was a Presbyterian divine of Huntington, Long Island, where he died in the sixty-first year of his ministry at that place. He pub. a Discourse on the Nature of Ordination, and several sermons, of which the titles are unknown. See Sprague's Annals, Presbyterian, iii., 1858, 30-36, (Letter by his great-grandson, Samuel Irenæus Prime, D.D., infra.)

Prime, Edward Dorr Griffin, son of Nathaniel S. Prime, D.D., (infra), b. at Cambridge, New York, 1814, graduated at Union College, N. York, 1832, studied theology at Princeton, N. J., was American chaplain at Rome in 1855, and has been for some years one of the editors of the N. Y. Observer, in which his letters under the signature of Eusebius have attracted considerable attention.

Prime, Nathaniel Scudder, D.D., 1785-1856, son of Benjamin Young Prime, M.D., (supra), and a native of Huntington, Long Island, graduated at Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. Jersey, 1804, was licensed in the Presbyterian Church, 1805, and was subsequently stationed at Sag Harbour, Freshpond, Smithtown, Cambridge, (New York,) and other places. He also acted as principal of literary institutions at Cambridge, Sing Sing, and Newburgh, and gained distinction as a teacher. This useful and excellent man died suddenly at Mamaroneck, N. Jersey. A notice of his services and publications, and a tribute to his memory, will be found in Sprague's Annals, Presbyterian, iii., 1858, 32, n. He pub. three single Sermons, 1811, '17, '25, an Address, 1815, Charge to the Rev. Samuel Irenæus Prime, (infra), 1837, many statistical and other articles in periodicals, and the two following works. 1. A Familiar Illustration of Christian Baptism, 1818, 12mo. In this work he defends infant baptism. 2. A Hist. of Long Island from its First Settlement by the Europeans to the Year 1845, N. York and Pittsburgh, 1845, 12mo.

"He had a mind of uncommon force and discrimination, a noble and generous spirit, simple and engaging manners, an invincible firmness in adhering to his own convictions, an earnest devotion to the best interests of his fellow-men, an excellent talent for the pulpit, great tact at public business, and a remarkably graceful facility at mingling in a deliberate body" —Dr. SPRAGUE, ubi supra.

Prime, Samuel Irenæus, D.D., son of the preceding, b. at Ballston, N. York, 1812, graduated at Williams College, Mass., 1829; studied theology at Princeton, N. Jersey, and preached for one year at Ballston Spa, and subsequently officiated for three years at a parish on the Hudson opposite Newburgh, retired from active ministerial labour in consequence of the failure of health, and in 1840 became connected with the New York Observer, of which he has been for about twenty years one of the editors and proprietors. Dr Prime has pub. about twenty-five vols. anonymously, and a number of others with his name. Among those acknowledged by him are 1. The Old White Meeting-House, or Reminiscences of a Country Congregation, N. York, 1845, 18mo. Several edits. 2. Life in New York, 1845. Prince, Thomas. The Silken Independent's Share Broken, Lon., 1649, 4to.

Prince, Thomas, 1687-1771, a native of Sandwich, Mass., a grandson of John Prince, of Hull, England, who emigrated to America in 1633, graduated at Harvard College, 1707; visited Europe in 1709, and preached for several years at Combe, in Suffolk, and at other places; returned to Boston, July, 1717, and was ordained co-pastor of the Old South Church, (Dr. Joseph Sewall being his colleague,) Oct. 1, 1718. He retained this connection until his death, varying ministerial duties with historical investigations. His valuable collection of books, and some of his MSS., (many were destroyed by the British during the Revolutionary War,) are preserved in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society. In addition to the historical work by which he is best known, he pub. twenty-nine single Sermons, 1717-56. A new ed., containing all that Prince published, (edited by Nathan Hale,) was issued in 1826, 8vo, pp. 439.

"Of the New England Chronology so far as it extends there has been no difference of opinion. It is distinguished for its accuracy and extreme caution. . . . It is therefore a work of the greatest utility, and almost necessary to one who would form an intimate acquaintance with the history of the first planting of New England."—N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1826, 468-466, notice of ed. of 1826

See, also, N. Amer. Rev., April, 1838, 477. Prince's elaborate introduction contains a chronological record of events from the Creation of the World to the Settlement of America. Portions of his work were repub. in 6th ed. of Morton's New England Memorial, 1855, 8vo. After Prince's death, Dr. John Erskine of Edinburgh pub. Six Sermons from his MSS., 1785. We trust that the Prince Society of Mutual Publication, established in Boston, June, 1858, (see Hist. Mag., N. York, Aug. 1858, 237, 256,) will publish his Diary and other MSS. of his which have never yet seen the light. Pringle, Sir John, 1707-1782, a native of Roxburghshire, Scotland, received his early education in the University of St. Andrew's, from whence, in 1727, he removed to Edinburgh for the study of physic, and subsequently continued his investigations at Leyden (where he was made Doctor of Physic in 1730) and at Paris. Returning to Edinburgh, he commenced the practice of medicine, and was in 1734 appointed co-professor (with Mr Scott) of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, in 1742 Physician to the Earl of Stair, and to the military hospital in Flanders; Physician-General to H. M. Forces in the Low Countries, 1743, Physician to the Home Army, 1745-46; abroad with the army on the Continent, 1747-48; settled in London, 1748; one of the Council of the Royal Society, 1753; President of the Royal Society, 1772-78; Physician-Extraordinary to George III., 1714; removed to Edinburgh in the spring of 1781, but returned to London in September of the same year, and died there on the 18th of January following. For a detailed account of the honours, domestic and foreign, which rewarded the merits of this eminent physician, and for notices of his publications, see his life, by Andrew Kippis, D.D., prefixed to Six Discourses delivered by Sir John Pringle, Bart., when President of the Royal Society, &c., [originally pub. separately, 1774-78], Lon., 1783, 8vo. tions on the Nature and Cure of Hospital and Jail Fevers, in a Letter to Dr. Mead, 1750, 8vo. Two edits. It appears in an improved shape as 7th chap., Pt. 3, of—3. Observations on the Diseases of the Army in Camp and in Garrison, Lon., 1752, '53, '61; 4th ed., 1765, 4to, 6th ed., 1768, 8vo; 7th ed., 1775, 8vo, 8th ed., 1810, 8vo. Also trans. into French, German, and Italian. This admirable work can be understood by any intelligent layman, and should be in the hands of every soldier, until the happy day when both physic and soldiers are unknown. Haller, in referring to the production, designates the author as "vir illustris, de omnibus bonis artibus bene meritis."

Pringle, Thomas, 1789-1834, a native of Blacklaw, Teviotdale, Scotland, had the misfortune in infancy to dislocate his hip-joint, in consequence of which he was obliged to carry crutches for life. About 1796 he entered the University of Edinburgh, and on the completion of his studies became a clerk to the Commissioners on the Public Records of Scotland. In 1811, in conjunction with a friend, he pub. a poem called The Institute; in 1816 was a contributor to Albion's Anthology and to the Poetic Mirror,—in which he printed a poem composed in imitation of the style, and which secured the praise and friendship, of Sir Walter Scott, in 1817 became co-editor with James Cleghorn of the Edinburgh Monthly Magazine, (after No. vi. styled Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine), and in the same year was connected editorially with the Edinburgh Star (semi-weekly) newspaper, and Constable's Edinburgh (formerly The Scots) Magazine, in 1820, in company with twenty-three others, including his father and his two brothers, emigrated to South Africa, and there (at Cape Town) kept a school and published and edited the South African Journal, and edited the South African Commercial Advertiser, until they were discontinued in consequence of difficulties with the Governor, returned to London in 1826, became editor of Friendship's Offering, and (in 1827) Secretary to the Anti-Slavery Society, which office he retained until the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, June 27, 1831, less than six months before his death. Pringle gave to the world the following volumes. 1. Some Account of English Settlers in Albany, South Africa, Lon., 1824, 12mo.

"It is impossible to read without the deepest sympathy this authentic narrative"—Lon. Month. Rev., civ. 434.

2. Ephemerides; or, Occasional Poems, 1828, 12mo. 3. Teviotdale, and other Poems, 12mo. 4. African Sketches, 1834, med. 8vo and 12mo. The first part is composed of poetical sketches (some of which had been previously published) descriptive of African scenery, animals, and customs. The second part is a prose narrative of the trials of a colonist. A review of the work, with a biographical account of Pringle, written, we believe, by J. G. Lockhart, appeared in the London Quarterly Review, Dec. 1835, 74-85. See, also, Lon. Athen., 1834, 361.

"A very interesting and useful work"—WM. ALLEN Journal, 6mo 19, 1834.

"It contains much graceful and simple poetry: . . . the second part is full of life and nature"—Athen., vii. supra.

"What strikes us as most remarkable in Pringle's poetry is its almost constant elegance. His prose sketches are extremely good."—Quar. Rev., vii. supra.

5. Narrative of a Residence in South Africa, 1835, p. 8vo; new ed., 1840, r. 8vo, again, 1848. In 1838 appeared—and to this book we refer the reader—6. The Poetical Works of Thomas Pringle; with a Sketch of his Life, by Leitch Ritchie, 8vo, again, 1839. See Ecol. Rev., 4th Ser., iii. 414; Lon. Athen., 1838, 67. See, also, respecting Pringle, Blackw. Mag., xxvi. 967, xxx. 745.

Prinsep, James, 1800-1840, a native of England, went out to the East Indies at an early age in the service of the East India Company in the Mint department, and was for ten years Assay Master of Benares, where he collected the materials for his graphic Sketches of Benares, was subsequently transferred to the Mint at Calcutta, and became Secretary to the Physical Class of the Asiatic Society, and editor of the Gleanings in Science, which he remodelled, in 1832, under the title of the Journal of the Asiatic Society, in 1832 succeeded H. H. Wilson as Secretary to the Asiatic Society. He pursued his investigations into chemistry, mineralogy, Indian numismatics and antiquities,—especially the deciphering of inscriptions,—until his constitution sank under the pressure. We are pleased to observe that Mr Edward Thomas, late of the Bengal Civil Service, has recently published a collection of Prinsep's Essays on Indian Antiquities, Historic, Numismatic, and Palæographic, with his Useful Tables illustrative of Indian History, Coinages, Weights, Measures, &c., with Notes and Additions by the editor, 1858, 2 vols. 8vo, 53 plates, £2 2s. 6d. Every student of Indian history must have these volumes, which "form a complete Chronology of India, based upon the most authentic records, viz. the Coins of all the rulers. Prior, L. M. Field Exercises, Lon., 1853, fp.

Prior, Matthew, July 21, 1664-Sept. 18, 1721, a native of Abbot Street, one mile from Wimborne Minster, Dorsetshire, on the death of his father was adopted by his uncle, Samuel Prior, landlord of the Rummer Tavern, at Charing Cross, who sent him for some time to Dr. Busby at Westminster School, and then removed him to the tap-room, with the hope that the youth would take a lively interest in supplying the wants of the gentlemen of fashion and letters who patronized this respectable "public." But better things were in store for the youth, who had already contracted an intimacy with the classics which was destined to serve him in good stead. If Horace has lured many a man into the tavern, it must not be denied that he took one out. The story runs as follows

"At leisure moments he pursued the study of the classics, on which account he was soon noticed by the polite company who resorted to his uncle's house. It happened one day that the Earl of Dorset and other gentlemen being at this tavern, the discourse turned upon a passage in an ode of Horace, who was Prior's favourite author, and the company being divided in their sentiments, one of the gentlemen said, 'I find we are not like to agree in our criticisms, but if I am not mistaken, there is a young fellow in the house who is able to set us all right.' Upon which he named Matt Prior, who, being called in, gave the company the satisfaction they wanted. Lord Dorset, exceedingly struck with his ingenuity and learning, from that moment determined to remove him from the station he was in to one more suitable to his talents and genius; and accordingly procured him to be sent, in 1682, to St John's College, in Cambridge, where he proceeded B.A. in 1686, and was shortly after chosen Fellow."

In 1687 he gained some reputation by his share in The Country Mouse and the City Mouse, folio, already noticed, (see MONTAGU, or MONTAGUE, CHARLES, Earl of Halifax,) a burlesque of Dryden's Hind and Panther, and about the same time he wrote his poem on The Deity,—an offering presented, according to the custom of his college, to the family of the Earl of Essex. His generous patron, Lord Dorset, still retained an interest in his welfare, and after the Revolution of 1688, by an introduction to the new court, placed him in the way to the successive promotions by which he was honoured. He was appointed Secretary to the English Embassy sent to the Congress at the Hague in 1690, and was shortly afterwards chosen a Gentleman of the Bedchamber by King William; presented the monarch with an Ode on the Death of Queen Mary, in 1695, folio, and with Verses on a Conspiracy against his Most Sacred Person, in 1696, folio; pub. his English Ballad in Answer to Mr. Despreaux's [Boileau's] Pindaric Ode on the Taking of Namur, 1695; Secretary to the English Embassy which concluded the peace of Ryswick, 1697, and in 1698 filled the same post at the court of France; Under-Secretary of State, 1699; a Commissioner of Trade, 1700, and in the same year published his Carmen Seculare, a panegyric on King William, folio; M.P. for East Grinstead, 1701, and shortly afterwards left the Whigs and joined the Tories; in 1704 pub. his Letter to Monsieur Boileau Despreaux, occasioned by the Victory at Blenheim, [Anon.,] folio; in 1706 gave to the world his ode (inscribed to Queen Anne) in honour of the battle of Ramillies, in 1707 (2d ed., 1709) pub. an octavo vol of Poems, and in 1712, 8vo, Two Imitations of Chaucer; in July, 1711, sent privately to Paris with proposals of peace, returned with the Abbé Gaultier and M. Mesnager, French Plenipotentiary, and brought the English ministers and Mesnager together privately at his own house, Sept. 20th, 1711; with Bolingbroke at Paris, on diplomatic business connected with the conferences at Utrecht, Jan. 1712, and after his lordship's return noted as ambassador until August 1, 1714, when the Whigs succeeded the Tories in power; thrown into prison in 1715, on a charge of high treason, based on the secret interview above referred to, and remained in confinement for two years, (during which he wrote his poem of Alma,) when he was discharged without trial; pub. his poems (including Solomon) by subscription, 1718, folio, by which he gained four thousand guineas, to which an equal amount was added by Lord Harley for the purchase of Down Hall, which Prior was to enjoy for life. In 1720 pub., anonymously, his last work,—Conversation a Tale, folio; died at Wimpole, a seat of the Earl of Oxford, (Harley's father,) in Cambridgeshire, September 18, 1721, and left £500 for a monument to be erected in Westminster Abbey. His last wish was religiously observed, and his diplomatic and poetical triumphs and historical aspirations have been preserved on the sepulchral marble by the classic pen of Robert Friend,—a gentleman to whom we have been obliged to administer a gentle correction on a preceding page, (170. Music, 1741, 4to; Select Poems of Prior and Swift, 1858, 12mo. Of Prior's History of his Own Time, compiled from his Original MSS. Revised and Signed by Himself, and copied fair for the Press by Mr Adrian Drift, (edited by J. Bancks,) 1740, 8vo, it is asserted that but little is really the poet's; and the work has always been treated with contempt. This vol. forms one of the two vols. 8vo entitled Prior's Miscellaneous Works, 1740. Of the folio ed. of his Poems pub. in 1718, there are three sizes. Solomon, in Latin, trans. by Wm Dobson, (see Spence's Anecdotes by Singer,) was pub. separately, Oxon., 1736, 4to. Translation of Geo Bally, Camb., 1743, 4to. Gibbon (Decline and Fall, chap. li., notes) calls Solomon a "verbose but eloquent poem."

"Prior," remarks his greatest biographer, "has written with great variety, and his variety has made him popular. He has tried all styles, from the grotesque to the solemn, and has not so failed in any as to incur derision or disgrace. His works may be distinctly considered as comprising Tales, Love-Verses, Occasional Poems, 'Alma,' and 'Solomon.' His Tales have obtained general approbation, being written with great familiarity and great sprightliness, the language is easy, but seldom gross, and the numbers smooth, without appearance of care. Of these tales there are only four. I know not whether he be the original author of any tale which he has given us. In his amorous effusions he is less happy, for they are not dictated by nature or by passion, and have neither gallantry nor tenderness. They have the coldness of Cowley without his wit, the dull exercises of a skilful versifier resolved at all adventures to write something about Chloë and trying to be amorous by dint of study. His fictions, therefore, are mythological. The greatest of all his amorous essays is 'Henry and Emma,' a dull and tedious dialogue, which excites neither esteem for the man nor tenderness for the woman. His occasional poems necessarily lose part of their value, as their occasions, being less remembered, raised less emotion. Some of them, however, are preserved by their inherent excellence. 'Alma' is written in professed imitation of Hudibras, and has at least one accidental resemblance. Hudibras wants a plan, because it is left imperfect; 'Alma' is imperfect, because it seems never to have had a plan. Prior appears not to have proposed to himself any dilt or design, but to have written the casual dictates of the present moment. 'Alma' has many admirers, and was the only piece among Prior's works of which Pope said that he should wish to be the author. 'Solomon' is the work to which he intrusted the protection of his name and which he expected succeeding ages to regard with veneration. His affection was natural; it had undoubtedly been written with great labour and with is willing to think that he has been labouring in vain? He had infused into it much knowledge and much thought, had often polished it to elegance, often dignified it with splendour, and sometimes heightened it to sublimity: he perceived in it many excellences, and did not discover that it wanted that without which all others are of small avail,—the power of engaging attention and alluring curiosity. The tediousness of this poem proceeds not from the uniformity of the subject, for it is sufficiently diversified, but from the continued tenor of the narration, in which Solomon relates the successive vicissitudes of his own mind, without the intervention of any other speaker, or the mention of any other agent, unless it be Abra, the reader is only to learn what he thought, and to be told what he thought wrong. The event of every experiment is foreseen, and therefore the process is not regarded. Yet the work is far from deserving to be neglected. He that shall peruse it will be able to mark many passages to which he may recur for instruction or delight, many from which the poet may learn to write, and the philosopher to reason. If Prior's poetry be generally considered, his praise will be that of correctness and industry, rather than of compass of comprehension or activity of fancy. He never made any effort of invention: his greater pieces are only fusties of common thoughts, and his smaller, which consist of light images or conceits, are not always his own. What he has valuable he owes to his diligence and his judgment. His diligence has justly placed him among the most correct of the English poets, and he was one of the first that resolutely endeavoured at correctness. . . His diction is more his own than that of any among the successors of Dryden, he borrows no lucky turns or commodious modes of language from his predecessors. His phrases are original, but they are sometimes harsh, as he inherited no elegance, none has he bequeathed. Of versification he was not negligent: what he received from Dryden he did not lose; neither did he increase the difficulty of writing by unnecessary severity, but uses triplets and Alexandrines without scruple. . . His numbers are such as more diligence may attain, they seldom offend the ear, and seldom soothe it, they commonly want airiness, lightness, and facility: what is smooth is not soft. His verses always roll, but they seldom flow. A survey of the life and writings of Prior may exemplify a sentence which he doubtless understood well, when he read Horace at his uncle's: 'the vessel long retains the scent which it first receives.' In his private relaxation he revived the tavern, and in his amorous pedantry he exhibited the college. But on higher occasions and nobler subjects, when habit was overpowered by the necessity of reflection, he wanted not wisdom as a statesman, or elegance as a poet."—Johnson's Lives of the English Poets, Cunningham's ed., 1854, in 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, where note especially Cowper's (Letters to Unwin) strictures on Johnson's Comments.

Charles James Fox (see Rogers's Recollections, 1859, 34) declared that the Doctor's treatment of Gray, Waller, and Prior—especially of Gray—was "abominable." Johnson's vigorous attack upon Prior as a composer of amatory poetry, and his unexpected and untenable defence of his volumes as "a lady's book," will be found in Boswell's life of the controversialist, edition of 1848, r. 8vo, the first on page 201, and the last on page 559.

"The best of what we copied from the Continental poets, on this desertion of our own great originals, is copied in the lighter pieces of Prior: That tone of polite raillery,—that airy, rapid, picturesque narrative, mixed up of wit and nature,—that style, in short, of good conversation, concentrated into flowing and polished verses,—was not within the vein of our native poets, and probably never would have been known among us if we had been left to our own resources. It is lamentable that this, which alone was worth borrowing, is the only thing which has not been retained. The tales and little apologues of Prior are still the only examples of this style in our language."—LORD JEFFERY Edin Rev, Aug 1811, xvii. 281, and in his Contrib. to Edin Rev, 1853, 380.

"Prior has left no single work equal to Gay's Fables or the Beggar's Opera. But in his lyrical and fugitive pieces he has shown even more genius, more playfulness, more mischievous gaiety. No one has exceeded him in the laughing grace with which he glances at a subject that will not bear examining, with which he gently hints at what cannot be directly insisted on, with which he half conceals and half draws aside the veil from some of the Muse's nicest mysteries. His Muse is, in fact, a giddy, wanton flirt, who spends her time in playing at snap-dragon and blindman's-buff, who tells what she should not, and knows more than she tells. She laughs at the tricks she shows us, and blushes, or would be thought to do so, at what she keeps concealed. Some of Prior's bon-mots are the best that are recorded. His serious poetry, as his Solomon, is as heavy as his familiar style was light and agreeable."—Hazell's Lects on the English Poets, Lect VI. And see Blackw Mag, ii. 683.

"Prior, lively, familiar, and amusing."—SKOLLETT Hist of Eng: George I, Notes.

"Prior was one of the last of the race of poets who relied for ornament on scholastic allusion and pagan machinery, but he used them, like Swift, more in jest than earnest, and with good effect. In his 'Alma' he contrives even to clothe metaphysics in the gay and colloquial pleasantry which is the characteristic charm of his manner."—Campbell's Specimens.

Cowper (letter to Unwin, March 21, 1784) refuses to believe that Alma was intended as an imitation of Hudibras. Alma, Mr Rogers assures us, (Recollections, 61,) was a great favourite with C J Fox, who repeated many lines of it to his auditor.

"The whole poem, from beginning to end, is one continued piece of ridicule upon the various hypotheses of physiologists concerning the nature of the communication between soul and body. The amusing contrast between the solemn absurdity of these disputes and the light pleasantry of the excursions to which they lead the fancy of the poet, contributes the principal charm of this performance, by far the most original and characteristic of all Prior's Works."—DUGALD STEWART Dissertation, First, Emcyc Brit, 8th ed., i. 70, n.

See, also, Blakey's Hist Philos of Mind, ii. 229. Mr Moore's favourite piece is thus referred to in his Memoirs.

"Lord [Landowne] asked me what was the poem of Prior's I had often mentioned to him as very pretty, he had been often trying to recollect it. It was 'Dear Chloe, how blubbered,' &c. &c. We took it down and read it. Nothing can be more gracefully light and gallant than this little poem. I mentioned Lowth's objections to the last two lines as ungrammatical, correctness requiring 'than she' and 'than I,' but it is far prettier as it is."—Dunelm Nov 1818, vol ii. 1863, 218.

"I believe that one chief reason for his [John Wesley's] high estimation of Prior among English poets was that he gives so many vivid sketches of man's wretchedness, in spite of all possible contrivances to enjoy life."—ROBERT SOUTHEY Life of [John] Wesley, 3d ed., ii. 498.

Prior is a great favourite with one of the latest of our critics:

"Johnson speaks slightly of his lyrics, but, with due deference to the great Samuel, Prior seems to me among the easiest, the richest, the most charmingly humorous of English lyrical poems. Horace is always in his mind, and his song and his philosophy, his good sense, his happy easy turns and melody, his loves and his Epicureanism, bear a great resemblance to that most delightful and accomplished master."—Thackeray's Lects on the English Humourists, Prior, Gay, and Pope, Lon, ed 1858, 17.

See, also, N. York ed., (Charity and Humour), 1858, 279. Of the most famous of Prior's "loves," the less said the better. Cowper was a great admirer of the "charming ease" of Prior's verse. We are told in Spence's Anecdotes that Prior was one of the nine "authorities for poetical language," selected with reference to the design of a new Dictionary, (before the appearance of Johnson's;) and in the same work it is remarked,

"There are but three poets who have any constant run of popularity now,—Pope, Prior, and Addison."

At the date at which we write, (1869,) the first only retains popularity; and, so long as men enjoy disquisitions on morals and strictures on manners, he is not likely to lose it. We have been obliged to hint at a serious defect of character in our poet, but we are more pleased to refer to a merit not always found among either poets or politicians, and Prior, we have seen, was both:

"Prior's writings evince less application to literary jealousy than those of any author of the age."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Scott.

To this let it be added (it is by no means offered as a justification) that if Prior's morals were defective his manners were perfect, and that if he loved some "not wisely, but too well," he seems also to have successfully cultivated the affection of others who were more worthy of his esteem. Procter, Adelaide Anne, the daughter of Bryan Waller Procter, (inf/a), b in Bedford Square, London, Oct 30, 1825, has long been known to many as the "golden-tressed Adelaide" of her father's beautiful poem, set to music by the Chevalier Noukonn, and doubtless sung by many who are now glad to sing Adelaide's own "Lyrics." Mr Willis, who visited her father's mansion in Bedford Square in 1838, thus refers to the subject of this notice

"A beautiful girl of eight or nine years, the 'golden-tressed Adelaide,' delicate, gentle, and pensive, as if she was born on the lip of Castaly, and knew she was a poet's child, completed the picture of happiness."—Pencilings by the Way

After contributing poems to The Book of Beauty, 1843, and Household Words, 1853 et seq., Miss Procter gave to the world in May, 1858, 1p 8vo, a volume entitled Legends and Lyrics: A Book of Verses,—which was so well received that a second edition was issued in October, a third in February, and a fourth in December, 1859, and a ninth in 1865. Two editions were pub in New York within a year,—1858, 12mo, 1859, 12mo, and several editions have appeared in Boston. See below

"Seldom do we meet a collection of fugitive poems so pleasantly fulfilling friendly desire, and so able to bear the brunt of criticism, as this. There is reality in it. It is full of a thoughtful seriousness, a grave tenderness, a fancy temperate but not frigid, which will recommend themselves to every one who has a touch of the artist in his composition. The manner (and this is much to say) is not borrowed. Without any startling originality, it is Miss Procter's own, and not her father's, not Wordsworth's, not the Laureate's, not referable to the Brownings."—Lon Athen., June 5, 1858, 712

"This volume of Miss Procter's is without question the most promising of any first appearance in this century, except that of Keats."—Lon Spectator, July, 1858

She edited Victoria Regia, Emily Faithfull & Co., Victoria Press, 1861, sup. r. 8vo, (2d 1000 in three weeks,) printed by women, and containing prose and poetical pieces by 58 contributors, (see Lon. Athen., 1861, ii. 463, 600, and 1862, i. 45-) commended by Lon. Times, Illust. Lon. News, Sat. Rev., &c. She contributed to this volume, and also to Good Words, All the Year Round, Cornhill Mag., and St. James's Mag. In 1851 she became a convert to and a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, and exemplified her zeal not only in her poetry, but in the self-denying labours of love and works of mercy which—pursued "with a flushed earnestness that disregarded season, weather, time of day or night, food, rest"—hastened her to an early grave. She died Feb. 3, 1864. See notices of Miss Procter in Atlantic Monthly, Dec. 1866, (by Charles Dickens,) and The Month, Jan. 1866, Art. XI.

Procter, Bryan Waller, is better known as "Barry Cornwall," under which name (Barry Cornwall, Poet, is an imperfect anagram of Bryan Waller Procter) all his works have been given to the world. He was born in 1787, educated at Harrow School,—Lord Byron and Sir Robert Peel being his contemporaries at that seat of learning; passed some time in the office of a solicitor in Calne, Wiltshire; subsequently studied law in London, and was called to the Bar, as a member of Gray's Inn, in 1831. He held, for many years previous to his resignation in 1861, when he was succeeded by John Forster, (p. 616, supra), who had before been Secretary to the Commission, a lucrative appointment in the court of Chancery as one of the Commissioners of Lunacy, was, we believe, born to a good estate, and certainly inherited a handsome legacy from his brother poet and friend, John Kenyon, (see p. 1025, supra). Those who would see a portrait of Mr. Procter in his library must consult Mr. Willis's Pencilings by the Way, already referred to in this connection, (PROCTER, ADELAIDE ANNE, supra) See, also, Mr. H. T. Tuckerman's article, entitled Authors, in Harper's Monthly Magazine, May, 1858, 791. The following is a list of Barry Cornwall's publications. 1 Dramatic Scenes, and other Poems, Lon., 1819, 12mo, 2d ed., 1821, (last ed., including No. 3,) with Miscellaneous Poems. Now first printed, 1856, cr. 8vo, 57 Illustrations, Boston, 1857, 12mo, pp. 368

Mr. Procter published this volume in order, he tells us, to "try the effect of a more natural style than that which had for a long time prevailed in our dramatic literature." How well he succeeded in his imitation of the elder dramatists may be judged of from the fact that Charles Lamb declared that there was not one of the Fragments to which, had he found them among the Garrick Plays in the British Museum, he would have refused a place in his Dramatic Specimens. We give some opinions on Dramatic Scenes, &c.

"I was mentioning the poems lately published by 'Barry Cornwall,' which had been sent to me by the author, and that, on calling at the publisher's to leave my card for him, I was told his real name was Procter, but that, 'being a gentleman of fortune, he did not like to have his name made free with in the reviews.' 'I suppose,' says Luttrell, 'he is of opinion quis non habet in crumena suam in corpore.' These poems, by-the-by, are full of original talent."—THOMAS MOORE Diary, July 9, 1819 Memoirs, &c., 1853, ii. 337

"None but a mind both of exquisite tact and original power could, in our belief, have created so many fine things in the very spirit of the old drama and of nature. He looks on the feelings of our daily human life through the soft light of imagination, rendering them dearer, tenderer, and lovelier to his human heart. If there be any truth in the fast-filling promises of genius, we do not fear to see him, in good time, crowned with the world's applause."—Blackwood Mag., June, 1819, 310-316

"A gentleman of the name of Cornwall, who has lately published a volume of Dramatic Scenes, has made no sacrifice at the shrine of fashionable affectation or false glitter. There is nothing commonplace in his style to soothe the complacency of dulness, nothing extravagant to stifle the grossness of ignorance. He writes with simplicity, delicacy, and fervour."—Hasell's Lects on the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VIII

See, also, Edin. Rev., Jan. 1820, 155, (by Lord Jeffrey,) Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1819, 321.

"The 'Dramatic Scenes,' his earliest, is in several respects still his best work, for they were evident overflows from his feelings and fancy, and are written con amore. Besides this, they had the charm of novelty, and bewitched all finer sensibilities by their being so thoroughly tinged with 'Elysian beauty, melancholy grace.'"—Moss's Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century, 3d ed., 1856, 233

"Œuvre facile et gracieuse, pleine de naturel et de vivacité"—VAPREAU Dict. univ. des Contemp., Paris, 1856, 1410

To the last edition of Dramatic Scenes, 1856, (ut supra), Mr. Procter prefixes the following explanatory observations and graceful valedictory

"Of the following 'Dramatic Scenes,' some were written thirty and the others forty years ago—the first six Scenes (published in 1819 and 1820) being now materially altered and condensed. The Miscellaneous Poems, constituting 'Part the Third' in the present volume, have never before been printed. With the exception of three small pieces of verse, they bear date many years back. They have, however, been corrected, in some instances completed, more recently. In all probability, this work is the last with which I shall try the patience of the public.

"At one time I—in common with other lovers of the charming Art of Poetry—prepared myself to enter those lists where the Muses are said to award a wreath to each of the bolder combatants; but a long life of labour (my destiny) ensued,—preventing few intervals of leisure, and forcing my thoughts into another course.

"If years have not 'brought the philosophic mind,' they have at least quelled those aspirations which are troublesome only to the young, and I now feel that I ought to disburthen myself from my armour, and leave to more active and heroic spirits the glory of the struggle, and the crown that awaits success."

But as Mr. Procter in 1820 (Dedicatory Sonnet to a Sicilian Story, No. 2, infra) insinuated that perhaps he might write no more, and in 1831 (Preface to English Songs, No. 8, infra) made his parting bow to the public, we shall still hope for a few more "last appearances." A notice of the last edition of Dramatic Scenes will be found in the Lon. Athen., Dec. 13, 1856, 1528.

2. A Sicilian Story, with Diego de Mantilla, and other Poems, Lon., 1820, 12mo, pp. 180; 2d ed., 1821, 12mo.

"There is a great deal of the diction of Wordsworth and Coleridge, and some imitation of their beauties, but we think the natural bent of his genius is more like that of Leigh Hunt than any other author. We hope that this is not to be our last meeting with Mr. Cornwall."—LORD JEFFREY. Edin. Rev., Jan. 1820, 33, 144-155

"We know of no young poet in our day who stands in a more enviable state than Barry Cornwall. He has done nothing—and he has done much—that he may not easily excel, much that many will easily equal. We must not, therefore, hear him speaking seriously of giving over before he has fairly begun. Everybody seems to think kindly and hopefully of him, he has smoothed the face of periodical criticism till it has smiled, he has done more than that,—he has acquired the friendship of all true lovers of poetry."—Blackwood Mag., March, 1820, 648-650. See, also, Edin. Mon. Rev., iii. 271, Lon. Mon. Rev., xci. 291.

3. Marceion Colonna; an Italian Tale, with three Dramatic Sketches, and other Poems, 1820, 12mo, pp. 190. Reviewed in Edin. Mon. Rev., iv. 176.

"If it be the peculiar province of Poetry to give delight, this author should rank very high among our poets. And, in spite of his neglect of the terrible passions, he does rank very high, in our estimation. He has a beautiful fancy, and a beautiful diction, and a fine ear for the music of verse, and great tenderness and delicacy of feeling. He seems, moreover, to be altogether free from any tincture of bitterness, rancour, or jealousy, and never shocks us with atrocity, or stiffens us with horror, or confounds us with the dreadful sublimities of demoniacal energy. His soul, on the contrary, seems fitted to overflow with images of love, and beauty, and gentle sorrow, and tender pity, and mild and holy resignation. The character of his poetry is to soothe and melt and delight, to make us kind and thoughtful and imaginative, to purge away the dross of our earthly passions by the refining fires of a pure imagination, and to lap us up from the eating cares of life in visions so soft and bright as to sink like morning dreams on our senses, and at the same time so distinct and truly fashioned upon the eternal pattern of nature as to hold their place before our eyes long after they have again been opened on the dimmer scenes of the world."—LORD JEFFREY. Edin. Rev., Nov. 1820, xxxiv. 449-460

In the concluding lines of this article, Lord Jeffrey announces the fact that Mr. Procter is employed upon the composition of "an entire tragedy." In the next year it was given to the world, under the title of—4. Minandora, a Tragedy, 1821, 8vo, 3d ed. same year, and was performed at Covent Garden with great success. This volume, censured with slight qualifications in Lon. Mon. Rev., ci. 50, was criticised with great severity in Blackwood's Magazine for May, 1823, xiii. 532-541. Indeed, Barry Cornwall had been out of favour in this quarter for some time past, and so continued: see vols. xi. 369, xii. 701, xiv. 491, xvi. 285-289, xvii. 369, xviii. 378; xxxviii. 71-83; xlv. 145-169, 539. "Byron is a great admirer of the poetry of Barry Cornwall, which he says is full of imagination and beauty, possessing a refinement and delicacy, that whilst they add all the charms of a woman's mind take off none of the force of a man's. He expressed his hope that he would devote himself to tragedy, saying that he was sure he would become one of the first writers of the day."—The Countess of Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron

"He cannot be said to equal in energy the older writers who have been his models, but at times he approaches them very nearly in deep feeling, in true pathos, and in fine and delicate delineation of human character."—MAS HALL

Mr. Moir quotes with great satisfaction the "just and proper précis of this poet's character, by Lord Jeffrey," (Edin. Rev., Nov. 1820, iii. 449-450), which we have cited on a preceding page, and thus continues "To this I would only add, that if one of the surest tests of fine poetry—and I know no better—be that of impressing the heart and fancy, Barry Cornwall must rank high, for there are few to whose pages the young and ardent reader would more frequently and fondly recur, or which so tenderly impress themselves on the tablets of memory."—*Sketches of Poet. Prynne, William, 1600–1669, a native of Swainswick, near Bath, entered Oriel College, Oxford, 1616; took his degree of B.A. 1620, was called to the Bar in the Society of Lincoln's Inn, and became Bencher and Reader, but gave little time to the practice of the law, though he certainly studied its literature, was a great admirer of the Puritan Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn, Dr. John Preston, and excited the ire of Laud and some of the clergy by several theological tracts advocating doctrines not in favour with the dominant party, gave to the world in 1633, 4to, his Histrio-Mastix, for which, on the false charge that he intended to libel the queen, (who, six weeks after its publication, had appeared in a pastoral at Somerset House,) he was fined £5000, expelled from the University of Oxford and from Lincoln's Inn, degraded from the Bar, set twice on the pillory, lost both his ears, had his book burned before his eyes by the common hangman, and was sentenced to imprisonment for life, still kept up the fire at Archbishop Laud, and in 1636 enraged him by his News from Ipswich, (one sheet 4to,) for which the Star Chamber again fined him £5000, set him on the pillory, condemned him to close confinement for life in Caernarvon Castle, made the hangman hunt up and out of what was left of his ears, and stamp him on both cheeks S. L., (intended by his amiable judges for "Schismatical Labeller," but translated by his unconquerable spirit "Stigmata Laudis,"—a better version see BASTWICK, JOHN, M.D., BURTON, HENRY,) in 1640 was released by a warrant from the Speaker of the House of Commons, was shortly afterwards made a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, took his seat in Parliament as representative for Newport, and conducted the proceedings against Laud, was made Recorder of Bath in 1647, and in the next year zealously advocated a settlement between the king and the Parliament, immediately before the king's trial was ordered into custody, for "denying the supremacy of Parliament" in a pamphlet entitled A Briete Memento, (1648, 4to, English. 1648, 4to, Latin,) Dec. 6, 1648, arrested by the army, and with others ejected from the House of Commons, attacked Cromwell and the army, and in consequence thereof was imprisoned in 1650, and again in 1651, dismissed from the Recordership of Bath in 1652, but re-elected after the Restoration, early in 1660 returned to the House of Commons as an excluded member, warmly urged the restoration of Charles II., and was elected in March, 1660, to the new Parliament as member for Bath.

"When the king was asked what should be done with Prynne to keep him quiet, 'Why,' said he, 'let him amuse himself with writing against the Catholics, and in poring over the records in the Tower.'"

Had Charles in his mind a passage between Henry VIII. and John Leland, the Prynne of a former generation? (See LELAND, JOHN, p. 1082, vol. 1., supra.) Accordingly, Prynne was made Keeper of the Records in the Tower, but he had no idea of being "kept quiet," and, being again elected M.P. for Bath, in 1661, in July of that year incurred the censure of the House of Commons for what it denominated a seditious libel, being Sundry Reasons, &c. against the new Intended Bill for Governing and Reforming Corporations. The luckless scribe, whose strange fortune it was alternately to defend and attack and be attacked in return by every great party of his day, was reprimanded by the Speaker and threatened with expulsion and prosecution. In his earlier days, doubtless, the intrepid combatant of king, archbishop, Protector, peers, and parliaments would have been "eager for the fray," but now he had "no stomach for the fight," and, whether it was that age had cooled his blood, argument convinced his reason, or the anticipated feast of Records bribed his integrity, confessing the alleged error and recanting his offensive language, he buried himself in his musty papers, forgot the faults of the living in chronicling the annals of the dead, and enriched the literature of his country with the most valuable of his many works, the Parliamentary Writs and the Chronological Records.

Thus death found him, and converted his life to history, whilst he was busily employed in instilling life into the forgotten history of those who had laboured and died before him.

The remembrance of his early days at Lincoln's Inn was perhaps still dear to him; for one of the last acts of his busy life was to endow the library of that respectable company with the fruits of—that is, the volumes achieved by—his literary industry. To this benefaction and the donor Wood thus refers in his account of the life and works of this great scribe:

"The books and little pamphlets that he wrote were theological, historical, political, controversial, &c., but very few of his own profession, all which are in number near 200, as the titles following show, bound up in about 40 volumes in fol and qu in Lincol. Inn Library. To which an eminent sage of the law, [William Noy,] who had little respect for those published in his time, promised to give the works of John Taylor, the water poet, to accompany them. 'Twas not only he, but many others afterwards, especially royalists, that judged his books to be worth little or nothing, his proofs for no arguments, and affirmations for no testimonies, having several forgeries made in them for his and the ends of his brethren. They are all in the English tongue, and by the generality of scholars are looked upon to be rather rhapsodical and confused than any way polite or concise, yet for antiquaries, critics, and sometimes for divines, they are useful. In most of them he shows great industry, but little judgment, especially in his large folios against the pope's usurpations. He may be well intitled Voluminous Prynne, as Tostatus Albulensis was 200 years before his time called Voluminous Tostatus, for I verily believe that, if rightly computed, he wrote a sheet for every day of his life, reckoning from the time when he came to the use of reason and the state of man. His custom when he studied was to put on a long quilted cap which came an inch over his eyes, serving as an umbrella to defend them from too much light, and seldom eating a dinner, would every three hours or more be munching a roll of bread, and now and then refresh his exhausted spirits with ale brought to him by his servant.

"Thou that with ale or viler liquors
Didst inspire Wythers, Prynne, and Vicars,
And teach, though it were in despite
Of nature and the stars, to write, &c.

"Thus Hudibras, part I. He was a right sturdy and doughty champion for the cause, a puritan beautiful, an inveterate enemy against the hierarchy of bishops, especially upon his imprisonment and sufferings for his Histrio-mastix, a busy, pragmatical, and meddling man without end, and one that had brought his body into an ill habit, and so consequently shortened his days, by too much action and concealment day and night."—Athen. Oxon., Bliiss's ed., lii 844-877, q v

We may quote some other opinions on Prynne before we have done, but we proceed just now to notice some of the many "books and little pamphlets" to which Anthony Wood, not the most lenient of judges when Presbyterians and Independents are at the bar, awards such limited, and that reluctant, commendation. 1. The Perpetuity of a Regenerate Man's Estate, Lon., 1627, 4to. His first publication. 2. Healthe's Sickness, or, A Compendious and Brief Discourse proving the Drinking and Pledging of Healths to be Sinfull and utterly Unlawfull, unto Christians, 1628, 4to. 3. The Vulouelnesse of Love-lockes, 1628, 4to.

"Such erudition as Prynne's always retains its value—the author who could quote a hundred authors on 'the unloveliness of love-lockes' will always make a good literary chest of drawers, well filled, for those who can make better use of their contents than himself."—Disraeli's Miscell. of Lit., ed 1853, 111

4. Anti-Arminianisme, 1629, enlarged, 1630, 4to. 5. God no Impostor nor Deluder, or, An Answer to a Popish and Arminian Caviil, in the Defence of Free-Will and Universal Grace, 1630, 4to. 6. Histrio-Mastix: the Player's Scourge or Actor's Tragedie; wherein it is largely evidenced that popular Stage Plays (the very pompes of the Divell) are sinful, heathenish, lewde, ungodly Spectacles, and most pernicious Corruptions; and that the Profession of Play-Poets, of Stage-Players, with the punning, acting, and frequenting of Stage-Playes, are unlawful, infamous, and misbeseming Christians, beside sundry other particulars concerning Dancing, Dicing, Health-drinking, &c., 1633, 4to, pp. 1050. This curious book has never been high in price: it is now worth about £1 10s. to £2 10s., according to condition. J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, p. 105, £1 11s. 6d. Prynne cites, in favour of his positions, 55 synods and councils, 71 Fathers, 150 Protestant and R. Catholic writers, 40 heathen philosophers, and numerous other writers,—in all, it is computed, amounting to quite one thousand.

"He has, perhaps," remarks a critic, "quoted from three to near hundred authors on a single point."

The references, it is asserted, are over one hundred thousand in number. The work employed the author seven years, and was nearly four years in passing through the press. Among his complaints are the following.

"Some Play-Books, since I first undertook this subject, are grown from quarto into folio; which yet bear so good a price and sale, that I cannot but with grief relate it, they are now printed in far better paper than most octavo or quarto Bibles, which hardly find such vent as they. . . . SHACKSPERE'S PLAYS are printed on the best crowne paper, far better than most Bibles. . . . Above 40,000 Play-books have been printed and vented within these two yeares."—Preface to the Christian Reader.

It is a curious fact that there was printed, and we presume performed, when Prynne was but ten years of age, a Comedy, author unknown, entitled Histriomastix; or, The Player Whipp'd, 1610, 4to. But Prynne, as we have seen by his title whips others besides players.

It was the complaint of Noy, the Attorney-General, in his speech against the book,

"He falleth on those things that have not relation to stage-plays,—music in the church, dancing, new-year's gifts, &c.; then upon altars, images, hair of men and women, bishops, and bonfires. Cards and tables do offend him, and perukes do fall within the compass of his theme."

Lord Cottington "carried the war into Africa" against the supposed author by affirming that Prynne never wrote the book alone "he either assisted the devil," exclaimed his astonished lordship, "or was assisted by the devil." Secretary Cooke, however, was not disposed to travel beyond the record.

"By this vast book of Mr Prynne's," he observed, "it appeareth that he hath read more than he hath studied, and studied more than he hath considered. He calleth his book 'Histriomastix,' but therein he sheweth himself like unto Ajax An-thropomastix, as the Grecians called him, the scourge of all mankind, that is, the whipper and the whip."

The sentence awarded to the author has been already stated: the publisher was fined £500, and prohibited to print or sell books, and the licenser, who seems to have been sorely bewildered about the whole affair, was removed and punished. Hallam seems to pity Peter Heylin, Laud's chaplain,

"on whom the Archbishop devolved the burthen of reading this heavy volume in order to detect its offences. Heylin, a bigoted enemy of every thing puritanical, and not scrupulous as to veracity, may be suspected of having aggravated, if not misrepresented, the tendency of a book much more tiresome than selitious."—*Comit. Before leaving this subject, we must not omit to notice a tract called Mr. William Prynne his Defence of Stage Plays, or, A Retraction of a former Book of his, called Histrio-Mastix, 1649, 4to. 37. The Substance of a Speech made in the House of Commons, touching the King's Answer to the Proposition of both Houses upon the whole Treaty, whether they are Satisfactory or Not Satisfactory, 1649, 4to. Prynn's explanatory appendix to this speech in favour of the king, (already referred to), and the speech itself, are of great value to the historical student.

"In this calamitous state of things, the famous Prynn rose up in his place and delivered a speech in defence of the king's answer to the propositions of Parliament. Long as it is, I cannot but recommend it to an entire and attentive perusal. . . You will see it in Cobbett, [Parl Hist see COBBETT, WILLIAM]

"Certainly a more striking exhibition of principle never occurred. Prynn was speaking in an assembly overawed by soldiers, in a situation that might have made a Roman shrink. Every reason that could irritate the heart of man concurred to make him inveterate against the king. He had to preface his arguments with relating what he had endured from him. . . Yet did this virtuous man continue to reason out his conclusion, hour after hour, with the most patient and penetrating sagacity. . . The subsequent events are but too well known. Cromwell and the army sent Colonel Pride to clear the house of all who were disposed to an accommodation with the king. The public execution of the sovereign followed. This cruel and dreadful outrage has given occasion to much reasoning with respect to the nature of government and the original grounds of civil obedience"—Smyth's Lects. on Mod Hist, Lect XVI

Of the condemnation and execution of Charles, Mr. Hallam remarks,

"It was, as we all know, the act of a bold but very small minority, who, having forcibly expelled their colleagues from parliament, had usurped under the protection of a military force that power which all England reckoned illegal. . . If it be alleged that many of the regicides were firmly persuaded in their consciences of the right and duty of condemning the king, we may surely remember that private murderers have often had the same apology"—Cromwell Hist of Eng, 7th ed, 1854, ii 226

"In no long time," remarks another historian of our day, "it became manifest that those political and religious zealots to whom this deed [the execution of Charles] is to be ascribed, had committed not only a crime, but an error."—LORD MACAULAY Hist. of Eng, vol i chap i may be collected from Cotton's Abridgment of the Records, which ought by all means to be consulted. It has been edited by Prynn, whose preface should be perused. . . Cotton is, of course, no authority in Westminster Hall or Parliament."—Smyth's Lects. on Mod Hist, Lect V.

"A good notion of the early constitutional history of England 1700

The First Tome of an Exact Chronological Vindication and Historical Demonstration of our British, Roman, Saxon, Danish, Norman, English Kings' Supreme Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction in and over all Spiritual Affairs, Causes, Persons, as well as Temporal, within their Realms of England, Scotland, Ireland, and other Dominions, from the Original Planting, Embracing of Christian Religion therein, and Reign of Lucius, our first Christian King, till the Death of King Richard I., A.D. 1109. Wherein, &c., 1666, fol. This has long been known as vol. i. (vol. iv., supra, is properly vol. i.) of Prynn's Records. The Second Tome, (A.D. 1199-1273,) vol. ii. of Prynn's Records, was pub. 1665, fol. The History of King John, King Henry III., and the Most Illustrious King Edward I., known as vol. iii. of Prynn's Records, (Dedication dated 1668,) was pub. 1670, fol. (Index to ditto, 1775, fol., pp xviii;) with the title-page and an address to the reader in Latin, 1672, fol.; and another Latin title-page, as vol. iii. of Spelman's Conoilia Decreta, etc., in 1688, fol. Of vols. i and ii, part of vol. iii., and the unfinished vol. iv., (infra), many copies were destroyed in the great fire of 1666, and it is supposed that not more than twenty-five sets of vols. i, ii, and iii. are in existence. The Merly copy (vols i, ii, and iii.) was bought by Dr. Dibdin, (who was authorized to give 200 guineas,) for £152 5s, for Sir M. M. Sykes. Another set, (vols i, ii, and iii,) sold by Sotheby & Wilkinson in 1856, was knocked down at £199 11s.

Of the set in the Stowe Library, sold in 1849, vols. i, ii, and iii. produced £140, and vol. iv., (more properly called vol. i.), supposed to be unique, was purchased for the Society of Lincoln's Inn for £335. This vol. iv.—doubtless the Introduction promised by Prynn in his Epistle to the Reader prefixed to vol. ii.—is unfinished, has no title-page, and was never published. It is called Book the First, and ends at page 400, with the words coepiscopi tui et comas. An account of it and of the other three vols. will be found in the (London) Law Review, Aug. 1849, (Prynn's Records,) 432-441. See, also, Oldys's Brit Lib., 11-21, Bp. Although Prynn comes down no later than the death of Edward I., A.D. 1307, (end of vol iii, pub after his death,) had he lived he would have continued his Records (such at least was his intention) to the reign of Elizabeth. The value of Prynn's Records it would be difficult to exaggerate. Bishop Nicolson's unworthy sneer has done less injury to his author than to the commentator. He remarks,

"Most of the copies of these two tomes [vols i and ii] perished in the dreadful fire of London, and no man has hitherto thought it worth his expense and while to give us a new edition from any of the few that escaped. His third has enough (in all conscience) to satisfy any reasonable reader, and supersede his inquiry into the state of the case, in either former or following ages."—Eng Hist Lib, 139

Had the Puritan left an annotation so discreditable to a historian, the bishop would have visited the offence with a rod of iron. Much more to the purpose is the comment of the blunt Norroy-King-of-Arms, William Oldys:

"Tis certain that neither of the three Volumes have been so sufficiently used by, or even known to succeeding Writers of or upon our English History, as such copious Materials, so carefully collected, do deserve."—Brit. Lib, 20, n.

So much for the value of the Records to the historian. As regards the lawyer, it has been well remarked by a modern authority,

"The indescribable industry of the author in the investigation of innumerable documents, many of which have since perished, has been found of great use to the practical lawyer, in cases involving questions of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, by the direct references to, and numerous transcripts of, original records which the work contains."—Lon Law Review, Aug 1849, 434.

We are not at all sure that it would not be worth Mr. H. G. Bohn's "expense and while to give us a new edition" (Bp. Nicolson, u' supra) of the Records, insluding the unfinished vol. (iv.) in the Library of Lincoln's Inn, with a copious Index Nominum et Rerum to the whole. It is a matter of congratulation that at the present moment (1860) Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, is doing so much, through the instrumentality of his corps of scribes, to render accessible the long-buried annals of British, Saxon, and Norman antiquity: see GREEN, MRS. Brief Animadversions on, Amendments of, and additional Explanatory Records to, the fourth part of the Institutes of the Laws of England, concerning the Jurisdiction of Courts, compiled by Sir Edw Coke, Knt., wherein the Misquotations, Mistakes of Records, are rectified, many Omissions supplied, especially such as relate to the Members of the High Courts of Parliament, with 10 Alphabetical Tables thereto, &c., 1669, fol

"His [Coke's] great age when he came to lick these papers over for the press would not admit of nicety and exactness, and he died before they were published. In Will Prynne's Animadversions upon them, a great many misquotations of records, &c. are noted, and the learned author is more severely reflected on than he ought to have been for a posthumous work, wherein we know not what injustice might be done him by the publishers of his Orphan-Labours."—Bishop Nicholson's Eng. Hist Lib., ed 1776, 161

See, also, (respecting Coke,) ibid, 153, 156, 161, 163, 187, 192, Marvyn's Leg. Bibl., 204–212, and authorities there cited, COKE, SIR EDWARD, p. 402, supra.

What the bishop says above is well said, and it may appropriately introduce a few lines handed us by a black-letter student, (a judge in one of the courts of the United States,) expressive of his own opinion of the merits and demerits of the legal and historical publications of this laborious compiler

"The profoundness of his learning, and the accuracy of his report of the materials which he has brought to light, and the consummate ability with which he discusses the interesting and important subjects of his numerous works, have given an undeserved reputation to his intellectual productions. He was a mere controversialist, and, as a controversialist, uncandid and uncharitable. His judgment bore no proportion to his intelligence. While we borrow from the rich stores which his industry and zeal have accumulated, we cannot follow him as a guide. Accurately as he reports his materials, his use of them is injudicious and unfair. Hargrave's elaborate preface to Sir Matthew Hale's Jurisdiction of the House of Lords seems to have been written with a view to prevent the legal profession from overrating the value of Prynne's writings. If this was Hargrave's purpose, he has prosecuted it successfully."

Clarendon tells us that Prynne was "not unlearned in the profession of the law as far as learning is acquired by the mere reading of books" (Hist. of the Rebellion, book iii., ed 1839, i. 324.) See, also, LILBURN, JOHN, p. 1100, (Clarendon Papers.) Of his political and religious sentiments, and his manner of exhibiting them, we cannot expect to find the Lord Chancellor an admirer. It is worthy of note, however, that Prynne's most valuable publication, the Records, (No. 49, supra), "received its original conception, augmentation, and production" from his lordship's "unexpected voluntary motion and subsequent encouragements." See Prynne's Dedication of vol. ii to Edward, Earl of Clarendon.

Sir Symonds D'Ewes evidently had a great respect for the reformer at the time he was brought under the saws and harrows of the Philistines on account of his Histrio-Mastix, ("He was a most learned, religious gentleman,") and risked his own safety by visiting him in prison. (See D'Ewes's Journal, May 8, 1634.)

A greater than Clarendon or D'Ewes, or any other friend or enemy of the "voluminous Prynne," wittily, if not very charitably, characterizes the latter as "a late hot quierist for tythes, whom ye may know, by his wits lying ever beside him in the margin, to be ever beside his wits in the text. A fierce reformer once, now rankled with a contrary heat"—Milton's Considerations touching the Unlawfulness to Remove Hiredlings out of the Church, 1659

But the immortal Bard of Paradise was also a violent polemic, and his dicta are not to be accepted as infallible. Psalmazar, George, 1679?–1763, was the assumed name of a literary impostor, supposed to have been born in the south of France, who at the age of sixteen, when in Germany, conceived an idea, successfully carried out, of passing himself off for a native of the island of Formosa. After many adventures in many characters, he was brought to London by the Rev. Wm. Innes, chaplain to the Scotch regiment of Sluys, was patronized by Bishop Compton, and translated the Church Catechism into his invented Formosan language, and also pub. (in 1704) his fictitious Description of Formosa; studied, under the auspices of the bishop, at Oxford, and subsequently led for several years an idle and extravagant life in London, became penitent and studious when about thirty-two years of age, and for the rest of his life—about half a century—was noted for that exemplary piety which elicited the respect and enthusiastic admiration of Dr. Johnson. 1 Historical and Geographical Description of Formosa, &c., Lon., 1704, 8vo, 2d ed., with a Vindication, 1705, 8vo. In French, Amst., 1705, 8vo. This fictitious narration, written by Psalmazar in Latin, and trans. for him into English as it went through the press, was partially compiled from the genuine account of Candidus, (see Churchill's Voyages, i. 503, 1704,) and Dr. Varenus's Latin Descriptio Regni Japoniæ et Siam, &c., Amst., 1649, 24mo, Camb., 1673, 8vo.

"Psalmazar exceeded in powers of description any of the great impostors of learning. His island of Formosa was an illusion eminently bold, and maintained with as much felicity as erudition, and vast must have been that erudition which could, on scientific principles, form a language and its grammar."—Disraeli's Curiosities of Lit

He also wrote a vol of Essays on several Scriptural Subjects, and a version of the Psalms, pub. anonymously an Essay on Miracles, by a Layman, (an ed., 1793, 8vo,) which was highly commended. completed Palmer's History of Printing, (see PALMER, SAMUEL,) contributed to the Ancient Universal History the histories of the Jews, Gauls, and Spaniards, and Xenophon's Retreat, (see BOWER, ARCHIBALD, p. 227, supra.) and aided the booksellers in various undertakings, by which employment he gained a comfortable support. "Among Johnson's associates at this time may be mentioned . . . the penitent impostor, George Psalmazar, who, after poring all day, in a humble lodging, on the folios of Jewish rabbin and Christian fathers, indulged himself at night with literary and theological conversation at an ale-house in the 1701 city."—LORD MACAULAY: Samuel Johnson, in Ensay Brit., 8th ed., xii., 1856.

"JOHNSON.—'I never sought much after anybody, . . . but I sought after George Psalmanazar the most I used to go and sit with him at an ale-house in the city.' 'I should as soon think of contradicting a bishop.'"—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

"I have heard Johnson frequently say that George Psalmanazar's piety, penitence, and virtue exceeded almost what we read as wonderful in the lives of the saints . . . His pious and patient endurance of a tedious illness, ending in an exemplary death, confirmed the strong impression his merit had made upon the mind of Dr Johnson."—Mrs. PROSS.

Watts,) and same work, Biog., iv. 1007. Of Owen's Welsh and English Dictionary a new (the best) ed. was issued at Denbigh in 1832, 2 vols. r. 8vo. Of the Myvyrian Archaeology of Wales, ed. by Owen Jones, Edward Williams, and William Owen, 2 vols. were pub. in 1801, and the third and last in 1807. Owen edited Y Greal, a Welsh magazine, and appears to have edited three vols. (the first in 1796, the last in 1818) of the Cambrian Register. He also pub. in 1819 a trans. of Paradise Lost ('Coll Gwnfa) into Welsh, and rendered Bishop Heber's Palestine and many of Mrs. Hemans's poems into the same language. His son, Aneurin Owen, 1792–1851, edited the Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales, pub. in 1841, fol., also in 1841, 2 vols. r. 8vo.

Pugin, Augustus, d. in London, 1832, a native of France, but a resident of England from an early age, gained great consideration as an architectural draughtsman. He was for many years an assistant of Mr Joseph Nash, (see p. 1402, supra), and was subsequently employed by Mr. Ackerman, for whom he drew the architectural views in the Microcosm of London, Lon., 1808–11, 3 vols. 4to, and in other works. ected from Various Ancient Buildings in England and France, drawn by J. D. Harding, 1831, 91 plates, 4to, £4 10s.; 1. p., India proofs, r. 4to; again, 1839-44, r. 4to; 2d ed., 1854, r. 4to, 91 plates. Assisted by A. W. N. Pugin. It is hardly necessary to add that the works of Mr. Pugin are invaluable to the antiquary as well as to the artist and architect.

Pugin, Augustus Northmore Welby, 1811-1852, son of the preceding, and Professor of Ecclesiastical Antiquities at St. Marie's College, Oscott, whilst yet a youth of fourteen to sixteen years of age attracted attention by his architectural scenery designed and painted for Her Majesty's Theatre and Covent Garden, (in which he assisted the Grieves,) and by his designs for furniture, plate, &c., (for Morel and Seddon, Rundall and Bridge, and others.) About 1834 he joined the Roman Catholic Church, and henceforth distinguished himself for his hearty zeal in the advocacy of her doctrines and the adornment of her holy places. About a year before his death, his mind gave way under the constant pressure to which it had long been subjected by excessive action, and the discipline of a lunatic-asylum added another to the many sad lessons which seem to be the soonest forgotten by those to whom they should prove of the most profit. To the great joy of his friends, he was restored to reason, and on Saturday, the 11th of September, 1852, he was carried to his "loved abode at Ramsgate," but on the following Tuesday he was seized with a fit, and died on the same night. A biographical notice of Mr. Pugin, by his friend, Mr. Talbot Bury, was published in The Builder, (see Sept. or Oct. 1852,) and another sketch of the deceased will be found in the Gentleman's Magazine, Nov. 1852, 534-538, see, also, March, 1853, 281, (sale of his Collection and Library,) Illus. Lon. News, Oct. 2, 1854. He was thrice married, and his widow enjoys a pension of £100 per annum from the Civil List. We have already noticed the assistance rendered by Mr. Pugin in the preparation of works published by his father, (see PUGIN, AUGUSTUS, Nos. 4, 6, and 10.) his own publications were the following 1. Designs for Gothic Furniture, XVth Century, Lon., 1836, r. 4to. 2. Designs for Iron and Brass Work, XVth and XVIth Centuries, 1836, 4to. 3. Designs for Gold and Silver Ornaments, XVth and XVIth Centuries, 1836, 4to. 4. Details of Ancient Timber Houses, XVth and XVIth Centuries, 1836, 4to. 5. Contrasts, or, A Parallel between the Noble Edifices of the XIVth and XVth Centuries and Similar Buildings of the Present Day, showing the Decay of Taste, accompanied by Appropriate Text, 1836, 4to, 2d ed., improved, 1841, 4to. This work, in which "the wretched state of architecture at the present day" is assailed in no gentle terms, offended many by telling (it has been remarked) "the bluntest and most disagreeable truths in the bluntest possible manner," but its strictures are now regarded in a more favourable light. See Blackw. Mag., Dec 1855. Modern Light Literature,—Art. 6 The True Principles of Pointed or Christian Architecture, 1841, 4to, (reviewed in Archæologist, Oct. 1841, 49-68.) 2d ed., 1853, 4to, in French, by T. H. King, Brussels, 1850, 4to. See No. 7. 7. An Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture in England, 1843, 4to; 2d ed., 1853, 4to. Originally pub., with illustrations from his works, in Dublin Review, 1841-42. Supplementary to No. 6. 8. The Present State of Ecclesiastical Architecture in England, with Thirty-Six Illustrations reprinted from the Dublin Review, Nos. 20 and 23, 1843, 8vo. 9. Glossary of Ecclesiastical Ornament and Costume, 1844, r. 4to; 2d ed., revised and enlarged by Rev. Bernard Smith, of Oscott College, 1846, r. 4to, £7 7s., 1868, 4to, £6 6s. This splendid work, which should accompany No. 10, is illustrated by 70 plates printed in gold and colours by the new litho-chromolithographic process, and about 50 wood-cuts in the letter-press. In the 2d ed. Mr. Smith gives us extracts from the works of Durandus, Georgius, Bona, Catalini, Gerbert, Martone, Molanus, Thiers, Maillon, Ducange, &c. 10. Designs for Floriated Ornament, 1849, r. 4to. See No. 9. 11. History of the Restored Church of St. Mary Wymeswold, 1850, 4to. 12. Treatise on Chancel Screens and Rood Lofts, 1851, 4to, also 1. p. In addition to these professional works,—which justly place Mr. Pugin in the first rank of his profession,—he pub. a number of religious tracts, of which we notice: 13. An Address to the Inhabitants of Ramsgate, 1850. 14. An Earnest Appeal for the Revival of the Ancient Plain Song, 1850. 15. The Present State of Public Worship among the Roman Catholics, 1850. A list of the churches, chapels, convents, school-houses, &c. erected under the directions of Mr. Pugin will be found in Mr. Talbot Bury's biographical sketch above noticed. Mr. Myers built for him no less than thirty-six churches, and, indeed, for many years before his death Pugin would allow no other builder to be employed in carrying out his designs. He furnished many designs for monuments and Gothic metal-work, (in the manufacture of which he was associated commercially with Messrs. Hardman of Birmingham,) and practised landscape-painting with great success. At Ramsgate this zealous and conscientious religionist (ever active in deeds of mercy to the living and the dead) erected a church, (St. Augustine's,) schools, &c., entirely at his own expense, and his body fitly rests in a vault of the sacred edifice which in life he loved so well. In his rare intervals of leisure he sought recreation on the bosom of the great deep, and was wont to say that "there is nothing worth living for but Christian architecture and a boat." There have recently appeared: 1. Recollections of A. N. W. Pugin, and his Father, Augustus Pugin, with Notices of their Works, by Benjamin Ferrey, Architect, F.R.I.B.A., with an Appendix by E. 1. Aus dem Tagebuche eines in Grossbritannien reisenden Ungarn, [Extracts from the Diary of a Hungarian travelling in Great Britain,] Pesth, 1837. To Eotvos's Budapesti Arviz-konyv (1839) Pulszky contributed some additional observations on England, and some comments on Germany in a series of Utí Vázolatok, or Travelling Sketches. 2. A Catalogue of the Fejerváry Ivories, formerly in the Collection of the late Gabriel Fejerváry de Komlos-Keresztes, and now in the Museum of Joseph Mayer, Esq., Liverpool, 1856. Commended by archaeologists: see Amer. Publishers' Circular, Oct. 28, 1856, 654. Pulszky also edited, with Preface and Notes, a Narrative of Events in Vienna, trans. by J. E. Taylor, Lon., 1849, The War in Hungary, trans. by J. E. Taylor, 1849, with Introductory Remarks, The Village Notary, trans. from the Hungarian of Baron Eotvos by Otto Wenckstern, 1850, 3 vols. p. 8vo, (see Edin. Rev., April 1850, 497-503, by Mr. Donne,) prefixed an Historical Introduction to Memoirs of a Hungarian Lady, (see PULSKY, THERESA, infra), pub. in 1854 The Tricolour on the Atlas, or Algeria and the French Conquest, partly trans. from the German of Dr. M. Wagner, or. 8vo, N. York, 1855, 12mo, (see Lon. Athen., 1854, 1325,) contributed papers to the Indigenous Races of the Earth, 1857, (see NOTT, JOSIAH, M.D. No. 3, supra), and articles on politics, archaeology, &c. to Hungarian and English periodicals, and is joint author, in conjunction with Madame Pulszky, of the following works. 3. Tales and Traditions of Hungary, 1851, 3 vols. p. 8vo, (N. York, 1852, 12mo,) vols. ii. and iii. were also pub. separately, under the title of The Jacobins in Hungary, 1851. These vols. are occupied by a history of the conspiracy of Martinovics.

"These oddly-titled volumes are a welcome addition to our stores of recent travel, and will prove acceptable to some for their amusing anecdotes and gossip, to others as an interesting supplement to the thousand and one stories of the Hungarian War."—Lon. Athen., 1853, 345.

"This book is the production of two very different minds,—a circumstance which enhances its charm to the reader, but aggravates difficulty to a reviewer. Theresa Pulszky, imaginative, quick of discernment, pictorial, affectionate, plays the treble part of the duet, her husband, a deep-searching, wide-ranging, calm-judging, clear, generous intellect, fills up the harmony of the bass."—PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

Pulsky, Madame Theresa, b. 1815, at Vienna, married in 1845 to the preceding; in addition to her share in the authorship of the two works just noticed, (Nos. 3 and 4, supra), has pub. 1. Memoirs of a Hungarian Lady, with an Historical Introduction by Francis Pulsky, Lon., 1850, 2 vols. p. 8vo; Phila., 1850, 12mo; 2d ed., Lon., 1855, 2 vols. cr. 8vo.

"It cannot fail to excite an interest in readers of all classes. . . We have to thank M. Pulsky for a brief and very able summary of the history of Hungary from the days of Arpad to the reign of Ferdinand the First and the reform movement of 1847."—Ms. Downe, Edin. Rev., April, 1850, 503, 506, q v.

Pulte, Joseph Hippolyt, M.D., b. Oct. 6, 1811, at Meschede, Westphalia, educated at the gymnasia of Brilon and Soest and at the University of Marburg, came to the United States in 1834, and for six years practised medicine at Allentown, Penna. Having become a convert to Homeopathy, he aided in the establishment of a Homeopathic College at Allentown. Since 1840 he has resided chiefly at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1852 was elected to the chair of Clinical Medicine at the Western Homeopathic College at Cleveland, and also filled the chair of Obstetrics for the two years following. He has been a contributor to the Allentown Correspondenz-Blatt, 1835-36, to the Amer. Mag. of Homeop. and Hydrop., and to the Quart. Homeop. Mag., co-editor of *Amer. Pulteney, William, Earl of Bath, 1682-1764, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, became M.P. for Hedon, Yorkshire, 1705, and soon rose to distinction as a Whig and as a personal friend of Walpole; from 1725 to 1742 was one of the most bitter of Walpole's opponents, and acted as chief assistant to Bolingbroke in the Craftsman, (see p. 215, supra); in 1731 fought a duel with Lord Hervey, (see p. 835,) in which both received trifling wounds; "shrunk into insignificance and an earldom" (Lord Chesterfield) in 1742, was prime minister for two days in February, 1746, and thenceforth took but little part in public affairs. 1. State of the National Debt, Dec. 24, 1716, &c., Lon., 1727, 4to. "Speaker Onslow describes him as 'having the most popular parts for public speaking of any man he ever knew' (Coxe's Life of Walpole, Append., v. 3.), and there could not be a better witness. His style was correct and classical beyond that of all other men, and his unprepared compositions were as correct and elegant as his most prepared. The same high authority has recorded of his spirit and his fire, when upon popular topics, that it was the spirit and the fire by which the orators of the ancient commonwealths governed the people."—LORD BROUGHAM, ubi supra, 154.

"While Sir Robert Walpole was prime minister, a question arose one day in the House between him and Pulteney, Earl of Bath. It related to a passage in Horace, on which they wagered a guinea. The bet was won by Pulteney, and the identical guinea may still be seen in the British Museum, with the following note in the winner's own hand: 'This guinea I desire may be kept as an heirloom. It was won of Sir Robert Walpole, in the House of Commons, he asserting the verse in Horace to be "Nulla pallescere culpa," whereas I laid the wager of a guinea that it was "Nulla pallescere culpa." He sent for the book, and, being convinced that he had lost, gave me this guinea. I told him I could take the money without a blush on my side, but believed it was the only money he ever gave in the House where the giver and receiver ought not to blush. This guinea, I hope, will prove to my posterity the use of knowing Latin, and encourage them in their learning.'"

Purcell, Henry, 1658-1695, the greatest of English musicians, a native of Westminster, received his musical education under Captain Cook, Master of the Chapel Children, and profited to some extent by the instructions of Dr. John Blow; in 1676 succeeded Dr. Christopher Gibbons as Organist of Westminster Abbey, and in 1682 became one of the Organists of the Royal Chapel. His numerous anthems for cathedrals (commenced in his boyhood) gave him great celebrity, but it is asserted that "the greatness of his genius is most conspicuous in his compositions for the chamber and the stage." Notices of Purcell and his many compositions will be found in Burney's Hist. of Music; Burney's Life of Purcell in Rees's Cyc.; Hawkins's Hist. of Music; Seward's Biographiana; English Cyc., Biog., iv. 1857, 1015-1017. See, also, T. Moore's Memoirs, &c., ii. 158, 159, 179; iv.

148. His anthems have appeared in various collections, and nearly all of them were recently pub. together in one complete work. The early publications of Purcell's music are: 1. Twelve Sonatas for Two Violins and a Bass for the Organ and Harpsichord, 1683. 2. Dioclesian; an Opera, 1691. 3. A Collection of Ayres composed for the Theatre and on other Occasions by the Late Henry Purcell, 1697. In use until superseded by Handel's concerto and other new compositions. 4. Orpheus Britannicus: a Collection of all the Choicest Songs for One, Two, and Three Voices, with Symphonies, a Thorough-Bass, &c., 1698, fol.; 1702, fol.; 1706-11, 2 vols. in 1. fol. The last is the editio optima. The editio princeps (1698) was pub. by subscription, at 20s. per copy. See Blackw. Mag., xlv. 4; Blow, JOHN, PLAYFORD, JOHN.

"The unlimited powers of Purcell's genius embraced every species of musical composition known in his time, and with equal felicity . . . Purcell is as much the pride of an Englishman in music, as Shakespeare in productions for the stage, Milton in Epic Poetry, Locke in Metaphysics, or Sir Isaac Newton in Philosophy and Mathematics."—Dr. Burney Hist. of Music. "Here lies Henry Purcell, Esq., who left this life, and is gone to that blessed place where only his harmony can be exceed'd."—From the inscription on Purcell's tomb in Westminster Abbey, ascribed to Dryden.

Purchas, Samuel, D.D., 1577-1628, a native of Thaxted, Essex, educated at St John's College, Cambridge, in 1604 was instituted to the vicarage of Eastwood, Essex, which cure he soon resigned to a brother,—as a preparation of his great work required him to reside in London. He subsequently became Rector of St Martin's, Ludgate, and chaplain to Archbishop Abbot, and at the time of his death was in expectation of a deanery procured him by Charles I. His latter years were embarrassed, (but it is not true, as asserted, that he died in prison,) partly, it is probable, by the expenses of publishing his Pilgrimes, but certainly by his exertions to provide for his widowed sister, Mrs. Pridmore and her family, and the four orphan children of his brother, Daniel Purohas. His publications are the following: 1. Purchas his Pilgrimage; or, Relations of the World and the Religions observed in all Ages and Places discovered, from the Creation unto this Present. In four Parts, &c., Lon., fol., 1613; 2d ed., 1614; 3d ed., with Additions, 1617; 4th and best ed., with Additions, and illustrated with maps and three treatises annexed, 1626. This last ed. always accompanies and forms the 5th vol. of No. 2.

"This my first Voyage of Discoverie, besides mine owne pore stocke laide thereon, hath made mee indebted to above twelve hundred Authors, of one or other kinde, in I know not how many hundredths of their Treatises, Epistles, Relations, and Histories, of divers Subjectes and Languages, borrowed by my selfe; besides what (for want of the Authors themselves) I have taken upon trust of other men's goods in their hands."—Dedication to Archbishop Abbot, 4th ed., 1626

2. Hakluyts Posthumus, or Purchas his Pilgrimes. Containyng a History of the World, in Sea Voyages and Lande Trauells by Englishmen and others, &c. In lower Parts, each containing five Bookes, 1626, 4 vols. fol. The 4th ed. of No. 1, 1626, fol., always accompanies these four vols; and the five are known by booksellers and collectors as Purchas's Pilgrimes, 5 vols. fol., 1626-26. The difference between the Pilgrimage and the Pilgrimes is thus set forth by Purchas himself in the Dedication from which we have just quoted:

"These brethren, ["voluminous twinnes of Pilgrimes," he elsewhere calls them,] holding much resemblance in name, nature, and feature, yet differ in both the object and the subject. This [the Pilgrimage] being mine own in matter, though borrowed, and in form of words and method, whereas my Pilgrimes are the authors themselves, acting their own parts in their own words, only furnished by me with such necessities as that stage further required, and ordered according to my rules."

The contents of the five vols. are as follows: Vol. i. of the Pilgrimes contains Voyages and Travels of Ancient Kings, Patriarchs, Apostles, and Philosophers; Voyages of Circumnavigation of the Globe, and Voyages along the Coasts of Africa to the East Indies, Japan, China, the Philippine Islands, and the Persian and Arabian Gulfs. Vol. ii. contains Voyages and Relations of Africa, Ethiopia, Palestine, Arabia, Persia, and other parts of Asia. Vol. iii. contains Tartary, China, Russia, North-West America, and the Polar Regions. Vol. iv. contains America and the West Indies. Vol. v., the Pilgrimage, contains a Theological and Geographical History of Asia, Africa, and America. For a more minute account of this great work, consult authorities quoted from and referred to below. The use made in the Pilgrimes of Hakluyt's MS. Collections has been already explained see HAKLUYT, RICHARD, No. 8. Purchas in his title-page gives this account of his materials:

"Some left written by Mr Hakluyt at his death. More since added, His also perused and perfected. All examined, abridged, Illustrated with Notes, enlarged with Discourses, Adorned with Pictures, and expressed in Maps."

We are sorry to say that these "Mappe," especially that of Virginia, the Indexes to the volumes, and the original frontispiece to vol. i. of the Pilgrimes, are wanting in many copies. For such barbarous mutilation what language is too severe? Oh, John Bagford, (see p. 98, supra), James Granger, (p. 718, supra), and Samuel Pepys, (supra), what mischief have ye done!

In our article on Hakluyt we also quoted some opinions on and comparisons between the collections of Hakluyt and Purchas, but we can hardly dismiss the subject without a few more citations:

"This worthy divine, who is by some stiled our English-Ptolemy, being desirous to forward his natural geny he had to the collecting and writing of voyages, travels, and pilgrimages, left his cure to his brother," &c.—Wood's Fasti Oxon., Bliss's ed., 1. 363.

"He has imitated Hakluyt too much, swelling his work into five volumes in folio yet the whole collection is very valuable, as having preserved many considerable voyages that might otherwise have perished. But, like Hakluyt, he has thrown in all that came to hand to fill up so many volumes, and is excessive full of his own notions and of mean quibbling and playing upon words yet, for such as can make choice of the best, the collection is very valuable."—Explan. Cat. of Voy. prefaced to Churchill's Collec., ascribed to John Locke.

We shall have to protest against this verdict, as we did against the same critic's censure of Hakluyt, (p. 755, supra.)

"This work is not only valuable for the various instruction and amusement contained in it, but is also very estimable on a national and, I may add, a religious account."—GRANGER Biog. Hist. of Eng., 6th ed., 1821, ii. 68.

"This was the book which Purchas informs Charles I. in his Dedication his father read every night with great profit and satisfaction."—Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature.

"We owe to the zeal and vast erudition of this laborious man one of the most celebrated collections of voyages which have ever appeared, valuable alike for the abundance of its materials and its importance in the history of early discoveries, especially those of the English."—Biog. universelle.

"The Pilgrims and Pilgrimage of Purchas exhibit a monument of care, diligence, and research that of its kind can hardly be surpassed."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 392.

"The accuracy of this useful compiler has been denied by those who have had better means of knowledge, and probably is inferior to that of Hakluyt, but his labour was far more comprehensive. The Pilgrim was, at all events, a great source of knowledge to the contemporaries of Purchas."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 227.

In Pinkerton's Collection of Voyages and Travels the accuracy of Purchas is impugned. We need not be surprised that the voluminous compilations and theological dissertations of Purchas excited the ridicule of the author of Hudibras:

"Dr Bulwer's Artificial Chattering, Browne's Vulgar Errors Purchas's Pilgrim, and even Pliny's Natural History, are the frequent objects of his satire."—Rev. Dr. T. Nash to Ep. Percy, March 2, 1791. Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii. 1858, 281.

Of the compilations of Hakluyt and Purchas Dr. Drake remarks,

"These vast and valuable collections are an honour to the reigns of Elizabeth and James, and, notwithstanding the industry and research of the moderns, have not yet been superseded."—Shakespeare and his Times, 1817, i. 477.

And place in your American collection, by the side of your Hakluyt and Purchas and De Bry, ("Fortunatos nimum, sua si bona norint,") the following work, recently published: Die Entdeckung Amerikas, nach den ältesten Quellen geschichtlich dargestellt, Von Friedrich Kunstmann; Mit einem Atlas, 1 vol. text and fol. atlas. The atlas consists of maps relating to the early discovery of America, and the text embodies a log-book of Sir Francis Drake, printed for the first time. This work can be had for about £6, but several times this sum will be demanded for a good set of the five folios of the Pilgrimage and Pilgrimes of Purchas. We quote the prices paid at sales and marked in booksellers' catalogues of a number of perfect (or presumed to be perfect) copies:

Sold from the following libraries: Towneley, £20 10s.; Stevens, £23 2s.; North, £23 10s.; Edwards, £25 4s.; Hibbert, £27; Drury, £29; Jadis, £31 10s.; Randolph, £31 10s.; Dent, £33 12s.; Bindley, £34 13s.; Nassau, £36 15s.; Williams, £42; Roxburghe, £43 11s. 6d.; Grafton, £46; Stanley, (with five portraits inserted,) £50 8s.; (resold, Drury, £29.) The reputation of the learning and labours of this worthy divine was not confined to his own land. An erudite foreigner thus testifies to his merits:

"Samuel Purchas, Anglus, linguarum et Artium divinarum atque humanarum egregie peritus Philosophicus, Historicus, et Theologus maximus, patris Ecclesie, antistes fidelis, multis egregius Scriptis, et in primis orientalis, occidentalisque Indiarum vasto Voluminebus patris lingua conscriptis celeberrimus."—*Joh. The work, upon which Purver laboured for thirty years, was finally published at the expense of Dr. Fothergill: see FOTHERGILL, JOHN, M.D. (supra.) Purver revised it for a second edition, but this has never seen the light.

"It is calculated to be of little use. It is often ungrammatical, and as frequently unintelligible. The notes are very similar to the text, and what is worse, full of pride and ill nature, [especially with reference to Dr. Kennicott.] Notwithstanding these prominent and pervading defects, Purver sometimes gives a better rendering than occurs in our version, and those who are curious in translations of the Bible will not fail to add the Quaker's version to their stock"—*Orme's Bibl. Pusey, Edward Bouverie, D.D., b. 1800, is the second son of the late Honourable Philip Bouverie, (who assumed the name of Pusey,) younger brother of the first Earl of Radnor, by Lucy, eldest daughter of the fourth Earl of Harborough. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated as a first-rate in classics in 1822, in 1823 was elected a Fellow of Oriel College, in 1826-27 resided for several months in Berlin, occupied with the study of the Hebrew and German languages and theological authors under the guidance of Tholuck, Sack, and other learned divines, and in 1828 succeeded the late Rev. Dr. Nicoll as Canon of Christ Church Cathedral and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University; he still (1869) holds these important posts, although he was suspended from preaching from 1843 to 1846, in consequence of alleged theological errors in a Sermon on St. Matthew xvi. 28, entitled The Holy Eucharist a Comfort to the Penitent, 1843, 8vo. For the ten years immediately preceding the delivery of this sermon, Dr. Pusey had given great offence to some, and equal satisfaction to others, by his connection with the Oxford Tracts movement, already referred to in this work: see CROLY, Rev. York Rev., v 136, vi 198, ROWAN, ARTHUR BLENNERHASSETT, No. 2; URI, JOHN, No. 4, WEAVER, ROBERT, No. 8, WILSON, DANIEL, D.D., No. 11. As we have already intimated, (see NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY, D.D., p. 1413, supra), we have here no speculations of our own to offer upon the merits or demerits of the theological and ecclesiastical doctrines zealously supported and vigorously combated in the various authorities to which we have, with conscientious impartiality, directed the attention of the reader in the preceding pages. Whatever difference of opinion, however, may be entertained respecting the dogmas held or supposed to be held by this eminent divine, there is but one testimony respecting his profound learning, untiring zeal, and exemplary piety. And it is but justice to add that he has repeatedly and earnestly protested against the use of his name as the distinguishing badge of a party,—professing himself to be nothing more than a follower of the Fathers of the ancient Catholic Church of the English branch, of which he considers himself a consistent disciple.

Pusey, Philip, 1799-1855, br. ther of the preceding, succeeded to the Pusey estates in Berkshire, 1828; was

M.P. for Chippenham, 1830, for Cashel, 1831, and for Berkshire from Dec 1834 to 1852; married Lady Emily Frances Theresa Herbert, second daughter of Henry George, 2d Earl of Carnarvon, 1822; President of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, 1854, and for several years editor of, and one of the chief contributors to, the Journal of that Society. To his pen in the Agricultural Journal, and to his example on his lands, English farming is greatly indebted for the rapid advances it has made in the last quarter of a century. Putnam, George, D.D., a Unitarian minister, b. at Sterling, Worcester co., Mass., graduated at Harvard College, 1826, was ordained at Roxbury, Mass., July 7, 1830, and has been stationed there until the present date, (1860.) Since 1853 he has been a member of the Board of President and Fellows of Harvard College, and from July, 1849, to July, 1856, was editorially connected with the Christian Examiner. He has pub. a number of separate Sermons, Orations, &c., and articles in periodicals.

Putnam, George Palmer, b. Feb. 7, 1814, at Brunswick, Maine, long and favourably known as a compiler of several good books and the publisher and distributor of many more, is descended (as are all the Putnams in the United States) from John Putnam, who emigrated from Buckinghamshire, England, to Salem, Mass., in 1640. He is the great-nephew of General Israel Putnam, and the grandson of General Joseph Palmer, who was a member of the Boston Revolutionary "tea-party," a volunteer at Lexington and Bunker Hill, and a friend of Washington. After some years' experience as a bookseller in the city of New York, Mr. Putnam established a branch of the firm of Wiley & Putnam, in the same business, in London, where he resided from 1836 to 1847, an able and zealous representative of American literary interests. Since the last-named date he has been engaged as a publisher and bookseller in New York. Between the ages of 15 and 18 he compiled the first volume in the following list, and at the age of 20 edited The Bookseller's Advertiser, a monthly periodical, (the first of the kind,) of which 12 Nos. were pub.

in 1834. This journal was succeeded by Duyokinok's Literary World, 1847-53, and by other literary periodicals noticed on a preceding page: see NORTON, CHARLES B. Mr. Putnam's own publications are the following: 1. Chronology; or, An Introduction and Index to Universal History, Biography, and Useful Knowledge, N. York, 1833, 12mo, pp. 432. Anon. 1000 copies sold. See No. 6. 2. The Tourist in Europe: a Concise Guide, &c., with Memoranda of a Tour in 1836, 12mo, 1838. 1000 copies sold. 3. American Book Circular, with Notes and Statistics, N. York and Lon., 1843. 4. American Facts. Notes and Statistics relative to the Government, Resources, Engagements, Manufactures, Commerce, Religion, Education, Literature, Fine Arts, Manners, and Customs of the United States of America, with Portraits and a Map, Lon. and N. York, 1845, 8vo, pp. 292. 1500 copies sold.

"Written with remarkable skill, and containing a great deal of useful information on important topics"—Fraser's Mag.

Also favourably noticed by Eccl. Rev., Lon. Lit. Gaz., Illum. Mag., Atlas, M. Chron. (all pub. in London), Brighton Guardian, Edin. Scotsman, and many other journals; less graciously treated by Lon. Athen. and Lon. Spectator. See, also, N. York Eccl. Mag., v. 410, Lon. Bookseller, June 24, 1858, 243. It is not to be doubted that the circulation of this volume did much to increase respect for the United States in Europe. 5. A Pocket Memorandum-Book in France, Italy, and Germany in 1847, N. York, 1848, 16mo. Privately printed John Allan, in 1864, 2421, with new title and 145 plates, $82 50. 6. The World's Progress: a Dictionary of Dates; with Tabular Views of General History, and a Historical Chart, edited by G. P. Putnam, 1850, 12mo, pp. 716; 1851, 12mo. Supplement to close of 1851, 12mo, 1852. New eds., 1854, 12mo, 1861, 12mo and 8vo, 1863, 12mo and 8vo, (Supp. sep.) 12th 1000, to Aug. 1867, 1867, r. 12mo. Founded on No. 1. In the preface Mr. Putnam informs us that he has largely profited by the excellent Dictionary of Dates of Haydn (most of the 4th ed. of which will be found in the World's Progress) and the Oxford Chronological Tables of D. A. Talboys. See VINCENT, BENJAMIN, No. 2. The World's Progress, which is the first vol. of the series entitled the Home Cyclopædia, (infra), is highly commended by the N. York Quar. Rev. &c. Among the many valuable publications issued by Mr. Putnam may be noticed The Popular Library, 24 vols 12mo, Home Cyclopædia, 1850-53, 5 vols 12mo, Putnam's Monthly Magazine of American Literature, Science, and Art, 1853-56, 6 vols 8vo; Putnam's Magazine, Jan 1868 et seq.

Between 1848 and 1868 he published more than 300 volumes of original American literature, including new works by Irving, Fenimore Cooper, Bryant, Hawthorne, Lowell, Bayard Taylor, Dr. Hawks, Kennedy, Judge Hall, Capt Wilkes, Prof. B. Silliman, (Sen and Jr.) Downing, Tuckerman, Moses Stuart, C. S. Stewart, Asa Gray, Miss Sedgwick, Miss Cooper, Mrs. Kirkland, Miss Warner, Mrs. Gilman.

The services of this gentleman to the interests of sound literature have already been noticed by us in our life of Washington Irving, (pp. 937, 943, supra;) and the more valuable testimony of Mr. Irving himself to the enterprise, integrity, and courtesy of his friend and publisher has since the lamented decease of the former been given to the world. See Life of W. Irving, Index; Atlantic Mon., Nov. 1860. We need hardly remark that we cordially concur in the observation of an American literary journal of high character, that "the letter of Mr. Irving to Mr. Putnam recently published is a document of which the latter gentleman's posterity will have reason to be proud."

Putnam, Mrs. Mary Lowell, a sister of James Russell Lowell, and already referred to on a preceding page, (see PHABODY, MISS ELIZABETH PALMER,) has attained great distinction as the mistress of many languages and as a contributor to the North American Review and the Christian Examiner. To her also we are indebted for the first translation from the Swedish into the English (Mary Howitt's version is from the German) of Frederika Bremer's novel of The Neighbours. She has published anonymously: 1. Records of an Obscure Man, Bost., 1861, 16mo. See N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1862, 283. 2. Tragedy of Errors, 1862, 16mo. See *N. Amer. "Pattenham is perhaps the first who wrote a well-measured prose; in his Art of English Poësie he is elaborate, studious of elevated and chosen expression, and rather diffuse,—in the manner of the Italians of the sixteenth century, who affected that fulness of style, and whom he probably meant to imitate . . . It is in many parts very well written. He quotes occasionally a little Greek."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, II 194, 210.

Pye, Henry James, LL.D., M.P., 1745-1813, a native of London, educated at Magdalene College, Oxford, was a descendant of one of the most ancient families in England, and was the lineal representative of John Hampden by the female line. He was chosen M.P. for Berkshire in 1784, succeeded Warton as Poet-Laureate in 1790, and was appointed a police magistrate of London in 1792. His principal publications are the following: 1. Elegies, 1763, 4to. 2. Six Olympic Odes of Pindar, being those omitted by Mr. West; trans. into English Verse, with Notes, 1775, 12mo. This is a valuable supplement to Gilbert West's Pindar, 1749, 4to, &c. 3. The Art of War; a Poem, trans. from the French of the K. of Prussia, 1778. 4. Poems on Various Subjects, 1787, 2 vols. 8vo. See No. 13. Among other good pieces in this collection is a translation into English of the Song of Harmodius and Aristogiton. 5. A Translation of the Poetics of Aristotle, first pub. in an 8vo vol., and then, corrected, prefixed to his Commentary on that work, 1783, 4to; better ed., 1792, 4to.

Mathias gives us his opinion of Leonora and the translations in English in a note.

"A sort of Blue-Beard story for the nursery. I am ashamed to think that the publick curiosity (I will not say taste) should have been occupied with such diablerie Tudesque."—(1796)

Mr. Charles Lukens, of Philadelphia, who has long been employed on an English version of Leonora and a collection of translations, would hardly endorse this verdict. We expect much from Mr Lukens's patient labours. See Amer. Pub. Circ., June 15, 1863, 168, April 15, 1865, 305, and Oct. 1, 1866, 242, 270.

Mr. Lukens's volume is thus announced, (in press, Phila., Oct 1866, imp. 4to.) The Ballad of Lenore, by Gottfried August Bürger a Variorum Monograph, containing the Original German, in both Latin and Gothic Type, a Literal English Prose Translation according to the Teutonic Idiom, One Russian and Thirty English Metrical Versions, including two—one characteristic, the other experimental—by the Editor, all displayed in contrast, stanza by stanza, on the same page, each Rendition being thus a Running Commentary on any or all of the Others; with a Sketch of the Author, an Account of the Sources of the Poem, and an Analysis

9. Alfred, an Epic Poem, 1801, 4to. His principal publication. 10. Verses on Social Subjects, 1802, 8vo. 11. Comments on the Commentators of Shakespeare, &c., 1807, 8vo.

"A readable little book, full of short notes on the various plays He treats the Commentators somewhat uncivilly, and is especially bilious against Warburton."—Austin and Ralph's Lives of the Poets-Laureate, 344

It will be remembered that Southey succeeded to the laurel after it had been declined by Sir Walter Scott and by him pressed on his brother poet.

"We must admit that, as a poet, his Muse's chief attributes are Mediocrity and Morality . . . An industrious student, a well-informed, cultivated, graceful writer; but a poet he assuredly was not. Weighed in the balance of contemporaneous criticism, he was found wanting, and Time has sanctioned the severe decree."—AUSTIN AND RALPH. ut sup, 336, 346.

Pye, John, an eminent landscape-engraver, b. at Birmingham, 1782, was one of the founders, and has always been one of the most useful members, of The Artists' Fund, of which a detailed account will be found in his Patronage of British Art: an Historical Sketch, Lon., 1845, 8vo. Mr. Pye has also pub. several pamphlets on the inferior position (recently improved) of engravers in the Royal Academy, and has within the last few months issued a vigorous protest against sundry alleged abuses, in his Glimpse at the Rise and Constitution of the Royal Academy of Arts of London, 1859, 8vo. A review of this publication in the London Athenæum (June 18, 1859, 813-14) concludes with a declaration not quite complimentary to those concerned,—viz.

"We repeat that all that Art has ever done in England has been done, not through, but in spite of, the Royal Academy."

If this be true, or half true, surely it is time that the record be amended. Mr. Pye's vignettes in Peacock's Pocket-Books, and his plates in The Literary Souvenir and The Amulet, were greatly admired.

Quain, Jones, M.D., a native of Mallow, Ireland, studied anatomy at Paris, subsequently taught this branch of medical science at the Aldersgate-Street School of Medicine, London, and afterwards became Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the London University, now University College. This chair, the duties of which he discharged with eminent ability and success, he resigned in 1836; d. 1865. 1. Manual of Pathology, from the French of Dr. L. Martinet, with Notes and Addits., Lon., 1826, 12mo. Several eds. American ed., Phila.,

4. With WILSON, ERASMUS, A Series of [201] Anatomical Plates in Lithography, r fol. with References and Physiological Comments, illustrating the Structure of the Different Parts of the Human Body, 1836-42, bd. in 2 vols., £12; col'd, £20, reduced to £8 8s., and £14, now (1860) sold at £5 5s. plain, £8 8s. col'd. Also separately, in five divisions, viz.: I. Muscles, 51 plates, II. Vessels, 50 plates, III. Nerves, 38 plates, IV. Viscera, 32 plates, V. Bones and Ligaments, 30 plates. Amer. eds., Phila., 1852, 4to, £15, col'd £30, N York, 1854, 4to, $20, col'd, $40. The value of these Plates can hardly be exaggerated.

Quain, Richard, younger brother of the preceding, was for many years Professor of Anatomy in University College, and on resigning this post to Mr Ellis (see ELLIS, GEORGE VINER) was made Professor of Clinical Surgery at the University College Hospital, which office he resigned in 1866. In addition to his editorial labours referred to in the preceding article, and the preparation of many treatises pub. in the Transactions of the Medico-Chirurgical Society and in medical periodicals, he has given to the world the two following very valuable works: 1. The Anatomy and Operative Surgery of the Arteries, [of the Human Body,] in [87] Lithographic Drawings the size of, and drawn from, Nature, with Practical Commentaries, 1844-45, in Nos., imp fol., bd (17 Parts) in 2 vols. folded, or in 1 vol. unfolded, with an 8vo vol. of letter-press, 1844, £10 12s., col'd, £13 13s. Of a new issue of 500 copies, at £6 6s. each, announced in 1846, after which the drawings on the stones were destroyed, 460 copies were subscribed for before Dec. 1, 1847.

"Although we have already given a full and elaborate analysis of this incomparable work, (No. 38, April, 1845,) we are induced to notice it once more," &c.—(Forbes's Brit. and For. Med. Rev., Oct. 1846)

From the notice thus referred to we extract the conclusion:

"In conclusion, it only remains for us to express our anxiety that the fact is collected by Prof Quain should be generally known by the wide circulation of his work. Our conviction is that no one who pursues it will fail to augment greatly his knowledge of the vascular system. To every operative surgeon and every anatomist its possession is essential, and into all public libraries it must command admission as the unquestioned standard authority on the anatomy and operative surgery of the arteries of the human body."—Forbes's Med. Rev., No. 38

"It is an honour to the age and country."—Med.-Chir. Rev.

"To the practical surgeon such a volume must be indispensable."—Lancet, Dec. 12, 1840.

See, also, Lon. Med. Gaz., Jan. 9, 1841.

2. On Diseases of the Rectum, in a Series of Clinical Lects., with Plates, 1854, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1855, or. 8vo; N York, 1855, 8vo. Commended by Brit. and For. Med.-Chir. Rev., N York Jour. of Med., &c.

Quain, Richard, M.D., cousin of the preceding, and a graduate of the London University, was for many years physician at the University College Hospital, and is now one of the physicians to the Consumption Hospital, Brompton. He is known as the inventor of the Sthethometer, and as the author of a valuable paper on Fatty Diseases of the Heart, pub. in the Transactions of the Medico-Chirurgical Society.

published, under the last name, a new volume of poems, Lyrical Fancies, Lon., Moxon, Dec. 1865, 12mo.

Quane, William, of the Isle of Man. The Northern Light; or, The Second Dominion, 1833, 12mo. Prophetic of "the golden happy age." May the author prove a true prophet!

Quarles, Francis, 1592-1644, a native of Stewards, near Rumford, Essex, educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and Lincoln's Inn, was cup-bearer to Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, and subsequently secretary to Archbishop Usher in Ireland. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion in 1641, he fled to England, where his piece entitled The Royal Convert, and his attachment to Charles I., attracted the wrath of the parliamentary party, who sequestered his estates and plundered him of his books and (what author will not sympathize with him in this loss?) several MSS. almost ready for the press. The worthy poet and historiographer (he was Chronioler of the City of London) sunk under this blow, took to his bed, and left it only for the church of St. Vedast, London, where he found his last resting-place. He was the author of many books in prose and verse, and the father of eighteen children, of whom one (vide QUARLES, JOHN, infra) rose to some distinction as an author. These—the works only, presuming that the reader will not be curious about the children—we proceed to enumerate:

1. A Feast for Wormes, in a Poem on the History of Jonah, Lon., 1620, '26, 4to, 1633, sm. 8vo; 1662, 12mo. 2. Pentaeologia, or the Quintessence of Meditation, 1620, '26, 4to. 3. Hadassah, or the History of Queen Esther, 1621, 4to. 4. Argalus and Parthenia, a Poem, 1621, '28, '29, '31, '47, '56, 4to, 1677, 8vo; 1684, 8vo, 1687, 4to; 1687, 12mo, 1692, 8vo, 1708, 12mo; 1728, etc. a, 4to. See Brydges's Phillips's Theat. Poet. Anglic. xxxiii.; Campbell's Specimens, QUARLES, JOHN, No. 9. 5. Job Militant; with Meditations Divine and Moral, 1624, 4to. 6. Sion's Sonnets sung by Solomon the King, and periphra's'd, 1624, 4to. Halliwell, 1857, £5 12s. 6d.; 1625, 4to. 7. Sion's Elegies wpt by Jeremie the Prophet, 1625, 4to. 8. Divine Poems, containing Jonah, Esther, Job, Samson, Sion's Sonnets, Elegies, Feast for Wormes, 1630, '33, sm. 8vo. 1634, '38, '42, '43, 12mo, 1652, 16mo; 1664, 1669, 12mo, 1674, sm. 8vo; 1680, 1706, '14, '17, 12mo. 9. The Historie of Sampson, 1631, 4to, 1632. 10. Divine Fancies, digested into Epigrammes, Meditations, and Observations, 1632, '33, '36, '38, '41, 4to; 1652, '57, '60, 12mo, 5th ed., 1664, 1671, 12mo; 7th ed., 1675, 12mo, 1679, '87, 12mo. 11. Emblems, in V. Books; with Anniversaries upon his Parante, 1635, sm. 8vo; Camb., 1643, sm. 8vo, 1660, 12mo; Lon., 1676, sm. 8vo; 1696, sm. 8vo; 1717, 12mo, in the Savoy, 1718, 18mo; Lon., 1723, '36, 12mo; 1777, 2 vols. 12mo, 1778, 12mo; s. a., sm. 8vo Modernized, (attributed to Isaac Watts, D.D.), 1764, 12mo. Late edits. 1812, '18, '25, 18mo; with Hieroglyphics, 1816, 2 vols. 12mo, with School of the Heart, &c., 1818, 2 vols. 12mo; 1823, 2 vols. 12mo; with Glossary and Notes, 1824, 2 vols. 12mo; ed. by Toplady and Ryland, 1839, 12mo, 1845, r. 32mo, N York, 1854, 12mo, with Crasshaw's Poems, and Memoirs of the Authors, and Crit. Notes, by G. Gilhlan, 1857, demy 8vo; with Sketch of the Author, 1858 and 1865, or. 16mo, with Illustrations by C. Bennett and W. H. Rogers, Dec. 1860, or. 4to, 21s., mor. 31s. 6d., with the School of the Heart, 1865, 1p. 8vo. Emblems, new ed., 1868, or. 8vo, 4s. 6d. See No. 12. It has been asserted that this, the best-known work of the author, is in part borrowed from the Emblems of Hermannus Hugo, many of which were taken from Andrew Aloati's Emblemate, Paris, 1635, 8vo, but this indebtedness seems to have been reduced to some of the prints and mottoes and a few of the ideas of the earlier poet.

"Quarles outdoes them all"—RICHARD BAXTER.

"An old puritanical poet named Francis Quarles, the sometime darling of our plebeian judgment"—WOOD. Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii. 684.

"They have been ever, and still are, in wonderful veneration among the vulgar"—EDWARD PHILLIPS Theat. Poet. Anglic..

"Milton was forced to wait till the world had done admiring Quarles."—HORACE WALPOLE Letters, ed 1861, ii. 99.

"He was a Poet that mix'd Religion and Fancy together, and was very careful in all his Writings not to intrench upon Good Manners, by any Scurrility in his Works; or any way offending against his Duty to God, his Neighbour, and himself."—LANGBAINE Dramat. Poets, 1691, 410.

"His visible Poetry (I mean his Emblems) is excellent, catching therein the eye and fancy at one draught, so that he hath out-Allocated therein, in some men's judgement His Verses on Job are done to the life, so that the Reader may see his sores, and through them the anguish of his soul."—Fuller's Worthies, Essex, 381, ed. 1662.

"We find in Quarles original imagery, striking sentiment, fertility of expression, and happy combinations, together with a compression of style that merits the observation of the writers of verse. Gross deficiencies of judgment and the infelicitous of his subjects concurred in ruining him"—HEADLEY Select Beauties, &c., i, lx.

"An author not of such little merit as generally has been supposed. He is often eloquent and often extremely pathetic"—REV. H. J. TONN.

"I think Quarles may be called the first, as Herbert was the second, divine poet of the English nation."—RYLAND.

"The charitable criticism of the present age has done justice to Quarles in contrasting his merits with his acknowledged deformities. That his perfect specimens of the bathos should have been laughed at in the age of Pope is not surprising. . . . He wrote vigorous prose,—witness his Enchiridion."—CAMPSALL: Specimens Brit. Poets.

"His writings are occasionally defaced by vulgarisms and deformed by quaint conceits, but his beauties abundantly atone for his defects; the latter being comparatively few, while his works generally are characterised by great learning, lively fancy, and profound piety."—JAMES MONTGOMERY.

"He is continually quaint, where he meant to be poetical; and turgid, where he intended to be sublime. He either soars into the regions of bombast and extravagance, or sinks down into a state of very prosaical flatness. . . . And yet the poetry of Quarles is not entirely deficient in merit. That, indeed, in a man of his high rank of intellect, would be impossible. . . . As a prose writer, Quarles stands upon much more distinguished ground. He has been excelled by none of his contemporaries in vigour or nervousness of language."—Lon. Retrospec. Review, v. 1822, 181.

"He uses language sometimes as greatly as Shakespeare; and though there is not much straight grain in him, there is plenty of tough, crooked timber. In an age when Herbert is revived, Quarles surely ought not to be forgotten"—H. D. THORNTON: Letters, 1866, 12mo.

Quarles, John, 1624-1665, son of the preceding, a native of Essex, admitted into Exeter College, Oxford, in 1642, was a captain in the Royal Army and served against the Parliamentarians, and, after the ruin of the royal cause, wrote poetry for a living in London, until carried away by the plague. 1. Quillinan, Mrs. Dora, only daughter of the poet Wordsworth, married in 1841 to the succeeding, d. July 9, 1847, after a visit to Portugal and Spain in 1845 for the benefit of her health. Four months before her death she published Journal of a Few Months' Residence in Portugal, and Glimpses of the South of Spain, Lon., 1847, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Her volumes are deficient in adventure, but abound in minute descriptions. A work that, on the whole, has more of taste than interest."—Lon. Athen., 1847, 641–643.

"That visit to Portugal of which her own delicate pen has left the world no pleasing a picture."—Ibid., 1853, 474.

See Johnston's Memoir, and Memoirs of Wordsworth, ut supra.

Quillinan, Edward, 1791–1851, a native of Oporto, of Irish descent, entered the Royal Army in 1808, and became a Lieutenant of the 3d Dragoon Guards, published "an elegant and piquant satire," entitled Ball-Room Votaries, and contributed other satirical effusions (which resulted in his undertaking three duels) to a periodical called The Whim; in 1817 married Jemima Anne Deborah, second daughter of Sir S. Egerton Brydges, who died in 1822, in 1841 married the only daughter of the poet Wordsworth, (see QUILLINAN, MRS. DORA,) and again became a widower in 1847. For some years before his death Mr. Quillinan resided in the beautiful valley between Ambleside and Rydal, near the residence of Wordsworth, and rests near him in Grasmere Church. See Johnston's Memoir, (No. 7, ut supra;) Memoirs of Wm. Wordsworth, by his nephew, C. Wordsworth, 1851, 2 vols. 8vo; Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1851, 438. He pub. many pieces in periodicals, and was the author of the following volumes: 1. Dunluc Castle; a Poem, Lee Priory Press, Kent, 1814, 4to. This was sarcastically reviewed by Captain Hamilton in Blackw. Mag., Oct. 1819, 574–579, (Poem by a Heavy Dragoon,) and the poet visited Edinburgh for the purpose of inviting his critic to the field. By a happy accident, however, they became excellent friends. "This memoir of one who may be called a lover of certain Poets, rather than a Poet himself, is but meagre. . . . On the whole, this volume must be considered as a contribution to the history of a group of remarkable poets, rather than possessing any substantial literary interest of its own."—Lon. Athen., 1853, 474.

Quin, James, 1693–1766, a native of London, long famous as an actor, is known to the bibliographer by a book, pub. anonymously, entitled Quin's Jest; or, The Facetious Man's Pocket Companion, Lon., 1766, 12mo. How many of these jests are properly ascribed to the rival of Garrick it would be difficult to ascertain. See The Life of Mr. James Quin, &c., 1766, 12mo; Davies's Life of Garrick; Galt's Lives of the Players.

"That sublime saying of Quin, . . . who, disputing on the execution of Charles I. and being asked by his antagonist by what law he was put to death, replied, 'By all the laws he had left them' I wish you would translate it into Greek, and write it in your 'Longinus' it has ten times more grandeur, force, and meaning than anything he cites."—*Horace Walpole to Rev. Quincy, Josiah, Feb. 23, 1744-April 26, 1775, a descendant of an ancient family who derived their name from a place in Normandy, (see the Roll of Battle Abbey, Matthew Paris, Camden, &c.), a branch of which had been settled in Massachusetts since 1633, (the date of Edmund Quincy's emigration,) was a native of Boston; graduated at Harvard College, 1763; studied law with Oxenbridge Theodor, and in 1765 succeeded to his extensive practice, in 1767 he pub. in the Boston Gazette, under the signatures of Hyperion, and An Independent, Essays on the oppressive measures of the British Parliament, in 1770, in conjunction with his friend John Adams, defunded Colonel Preston and his eight soldiers arraigned for murder committed on occasion of the "Boston massacre," in 1771 and 1772 pub., in the Boston Gazette, patriotic Essays, under the signatures of Mentor, Edward Sexby, and Marchmont Needham, in May, 1774, pub. in Boston, (repub. in London same year, and commended in Monthly Review, August, p. 148,) Observations on the Act of Parliament commonly called the Boston Port Bill, &c., 8vo, (repub. in Memoirs of Josiah Quincy, Junior, by his son, Josiah Quincy, Bost., 1825, 8vo,) in September, 1774, embarked for London, and there zealously and ably laboured in the cause of American Independence, in March, 1775, re-embarked for Boston, and died (exclaiming, "Oh that I might live to render to my country one last service!") within sight of land, on the 20th of the ensuing month. See QUINCY, SAMUEL M. No language within our capacity can do justice to the value of the patriotic services of this eminent man. We must refer the reader to the excellent Memoir by his son, above noticed, to the histories of the United States, the writings and the lives of John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Thomas Jefferson, and other early American statesmen. 45. Essays on the Soiling of Cattle, illustrated by Experience, and an Address, containing Suggestions which may be useful to Farmers, 8vo, 1859, 2d ed., 1860; new ed., with a Memoir of the Author by Edmund Quincy, 1866, 8vo. Mr Quincy is also the author of four articles in the Monthly Anthology, 1809-10, vols. vii and viii, (reviews of the writings of Fisher Ames,) and of many papers in other periodicals. It will thus be seen, by the long catalogue of publications now recorded, that not only a zealous defence of the principles of political freedom has employed Mr Quincy's ready pen, but that the promotion of the genial arts of peace, of statesmanship, of agriculture, of charity, and of letters, has distinguished every period of his long and honoured life.

"This young man," remarks Mrs John Adams, in a letter written in the midst of Washington's family circle, where Mr Quincy was a welcomed visitor, "is a rare instance of hereditary eloquence and ingenuity in the fourth generation. He comes into life with every advantage of family, fortune, and education, and I wish him all the success which such auguries naturally present to him in prospect."

The "auguries" have been well accomplished: "Few men," it is the declaration of the eminent Judge Story, "have acquired so just a distinction for unspotted integrity, fearless justice, consistent principles, high talents, and extensive literature. Still fewer possess the merit of having justified the public confidence by the singleness of heart and purpose with which they have devoted themselves to the best interests of society."—Dedication of Story's Miscellaneous Works to the Hon Josiah Quincy, LL D., October, 1835.

It is an interesting fact that at the present moment—a quarter of a century since this honourable testimonial was given to the world—a son of Judge Story, equally conversant with the pen and the chisel, is engaged on a marble statue of Mr Quincy for the Alumni of Harvard College. We trust that the artist will succeed as well as Mr. Wight, who painted the excellent portrait of the same original for the graduating class of Harvard College of 1829. Radcliffe, Anne, 1764-1823, the daughter of William Ward, was married in 1787 to William Radcliffe, a graduate of Oxford, a member of one of the Inns of Court, and subsequently proprietor of the English Chronicle. In 1794 she travelled on the Continent, and in the ensuing year gave the results of her observations to the public. Although distinguished for beauty, and the object of much curiosity after the publication of her second novel, she studiously avoided London society, and spent her time in excursions to favourite rural resorts and in the enjoyment of her quiet home, where she seems to have cared for little society in addition to her husband. Her character was exemplary, and "her piety, though cheerful, deep and sincere." Her publications appeared in the following order. 1. The Castles of Athlin and Dunbayne, a Highland Story, Lon., 1789, 12mo; new ed., 12mo. Not successful. 2. A Sicilian Romance, 1790, 2 vols. 12mo; new ed., 3 vols. 12mo. Successful. 3. The Romance of the Forest interspersed with some Pieces of Poetry, 1791, 3 vols. 12mo; 1794, 3 vols. 12mo; new eds. 3 vols. 12mo; 24mo, Phila., 2 vols. in 1, 32mo; N. York, 1857, 12mo. Mrs. Barbauld and some others seem to prefer this novel to the succeeding. 4. The Mysteries of Udolpho; a Romance interspersed with Pieces of Poetry, Lon., 1794, 4 vols. 12mo. Sold to the bookseller for £500. Many British eds., Phila., 3 vols. in 1, 24mo, N. York, 1857, 12mo. Sheridan and Fox praised this work in the warmest terms, and Dr. Joseph Warton sat up half the night to read it.

"The very name was fascinating, and the public, who rushed upon it with all the eagerness of curiosity, rose from it with unate appetite. When a family was numerous, the volumes always flew, and were sometimes torn, from hand to hand, and the complaints of those whose studies were thus interrupted were a general tribute to the genius of the author. In general the Mysteries of Udolpho was at its first appearance considered as a step beyond Mrs. Radcliffe's former work, [The Romance of the Forest], high as that had justly advanced her. We entertain the same opinion in again reading them both, even after some years' interval. With the majority of readers, the superior magnificence of landscape, and dignity of conception of character secured the palm for the more recent work."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Mrs Radcliffe Biographical Notices of Eminent Novelists

"In order to raise strong emotions of fear and horror in the body of the work, the author is tempted to go to lengths to account for which the subsequent explanations seem utterly inadequate. Thus, for example, after all the wonder and dismay and terror and expectation excited by the mysterious chamber in the castle of Udolpho, how much are we disappointed and disgusted to find that all this pother has been raised by a waxen statue!"—Dunlop's History of Fiction

Rev.*, lix. 328. Gaston De Blondville (not written for publication) was announced in advance by Sir W. Scott, (Life of Mrs. Radcliffe), and by Blackwood's Magazine, (xi. 331,) and on its appearance commended strongly by the British Press, the News of Literature, and the Literary Gazette, and faintly by Mrs. Elwood, (Memoirs of the Literary Ladies of England, i. 164); but the Edinburgh Reviewer

(lix. 337) declares that it is "quite unworthy of its predecessors."

MRS. RADCLIFFE AS A PROSE WRITER.

"The praise may be claimed for Mrs. Radcliffe of having been the first [!] to introduce into her prose fictions a beautiful and fanciful tone of natural description and impressive narrative which had hitherto been exclusively applied to poetry. Fielding, Richardson, Smollett, even Walpole, though writing upon an imaginative subject, are decidedly prose authors. Mrs. Radcliffe has a title to be considered as the first poetess of romantic fiction, that is, if actual rhythm shall not be deemed essential to poetry.

It may be true that Mrs. Radcliffe rather walks in fairy-land than in the region of realities, and that she has neither displayed the command of the human passions, nor the insight into the human heart, nor the observation of life and manners, which recommend other authors in the same line. But she has taken the lead in a line of composition appealing to those powerful and general sources of interest, a latent sense of supernatural awe, and curiosity concerning whatever is hidden and mysterious, and if she has been ever nearly approached in this walk, which we should hesitate to affirm, it is at least certain that she has never been excelled, or even equalled."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Mrs Radcliffe

On a preceding page of the biographical sketch from which we have just quoted, Sir Walter throws out a few reflections on novel-reading which are well worth the consideration of the classes of critics for whom they are intended.

"Perhaps the perusal of such works may without injustice be compared with the use of opiates,—baneful when habitually and constantly resorted to, but of most blessed power in those moments of pain and languor when the whole head is sore and the whole heart sick. If those who rail indiscriminately at this species of composition were to consider the quantity of actual pleasure which it produces, and the much greater proportion of real sorrow and distress which it alleviates, their philanthropy ought to moderate their critical pride or religious intolerance.

This is a very modest estimate of the claims of fiction, which in all ages has been a most potent teacher, as well as physician, friend, and comforter; but let the principle of selection which prevails in the choice of our other domestic guests be not neglected with reference to those who may influence so powerfully our hearts or our imaginations. Surely there is enough to satisfy the taste for fiction in the characters and descriptions of such writers as Scott, Austen, Edgeworth, Cooper, Thackeray, and Dickens, without resorting to the assassins, the libertines, the haunted castles, and the horrid dungeons of Radcliffe, of Lewis, of Maturni, and of Godwin! As regards the lawfulness of this instrumentality, an eminent critic, whose abundant stores of learning were always informed by the most wholesome common sense, remarks,

"His [Bunyan's] mind was now in a firm and healthy state. He saw that in employing fiction to make truth clear and goodness attractive, he was only following the example which every Christian ought to propose to himself, and he determined to print [his Pilgrim's Progress]."—LORD MACAULAY Life of John Bunyan Enycy Brit., 8th ed., v. 1854

We continue our citations of opinions on our author.

"We would not pass over without a tribute of gratitude Mrs. Radcliffe's wild and wondrous tales. When we read them, the world seems shut out, and we breathe only in an enchanted region, where lovers' sutes tremble over placid waters, mouldering castles rise conscious of deeds of blood, and the sad voices of the past echo through deep vaults and lonely galleries. There is always majesty in her terrors. She produces more effect by whispers and slender hints than ever was attained by the most vivid display of horrors. Her conclusions are tame and impotent almost without example. But, while her spells actually operate, her power is truly magical. . . . Of all romance-writers, Mrs. Radcliffe is the most romantic."—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD New Monthly Mag. repub. in his Miscellaneous Writings

"Her descriptions of scenery, indeed, are vague and wordy to the last degree, they are neither like Salvator nor Claude, nor nature nor art, and she dwells on the effects of moonlight till we are sometimes weary of them, her characters are misapplied,—the shadows of a shade, continued on, under different names, through all her novels; her story comes to nothing. But in harrowing up the soul with imaginary horrors, and making the flesh creep and the nerves thrill with fond hopes and fears, she is unrivalled among her fair countrywomen. Her great power lies in describing the indefinable, and embodying a phantom. She makes her readers twice children. . . . All the fascination that links the world of passion to the world unknown is hers, and she plays with it at her pleasure. She has all the poetry of romance, all that is obscure, visionary, and objectless in the imagination."—HARLITT: Lect. on the English Novelists

"The mysterious inventions of Mrs. Radcliffe and her ghostly school."—Ibid. - Musell, 1855, 589.

"His [Scott's] are not luxuriant and glowing pictures of imaginary beauty, like those of Mrs. Radcliffe, having no resemblance to actual nature, but faithful and graphic portraits of real scenes, drawn with the eye of a poet but the fidelity of a some of his draughtsmen. . . . The novels of Charlotte Smith and Mrs. Radcliffe . . . are now wellnigh unreadable."—SIR ARTHUR ALBON. Blackw. Mag., March, 1832, and Sept. 1845; republ. in his Essays, 1850, iii, 6, 639.

"She seems to mourn to move those passions which form the interest of common novels she alarms the soul with terror, agitates it with suspense, prolonged and wrought up to the most intense feeling by mysterious hints and obscure intimations of unseemly danger."—MRS. BARBAULD.

After an eloquent summing up of the characteristics of Mrs. Radcliffe's novels, an agreeable writer thus concludes:

"Anne Radcliffe and her mysterious triumph. But all this, though impressive, and sometimes grand, is unnatural: such actions could not last—they were not of God, and so they failed. The authoress lived long enough to see the fabric which she had reared melt away, and Nature resume her reign with the same ease and quietness that the moon succeeds the tempest."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM. *Biog. and Crit. MRS. RADCLIFFE AS A POETESS.

"The warmth of imagination which Mrs. Radcliffe manifests was naturally connected with an inclination towards poetry, and accordingly songs, sonnets, and pieces of fugitive verse amuse and relieve the reader in the course of her volumes. [This was written before the publication of her Poems in 1826, supra] These are not in this place the legitimate subject of criticism, but it may be remarked that they display more liveliness and richness of fancy than correctness of taste or felicity of expression."—SIR W. SCOTT. Life of Mrs. Radcliffe.

"The pieces of verses interspersed in her various romances display the same peculiar powers which characterise her prose compositions; they are marked by great energy of imagination, and rich eloquence of style."—Routon's Female Poets of G. Brit., 1848, 271.

The following opinions refer to the collective edition of her Poems pub. in 1826, and again in 1834, (supra.) Perhaps Leigh Hunt intends a wider application.

"Though some of these performances are above the common run of verses, it is to her prose works she must trust for her name being handed down to posterity as a first-rate writer in her peculiar line."—MRS. ELWOOD. Life of Mrs. Radcliffe.

"We must now bid adieu to these poems. They are little calculated, certainly, to increase the reputation of Mrs. Radcliffe, and perhaps her friends would have acted more judiciously if they had allowed them to remain in that obscurity in which they were left by their amiable authoress. . . . There seem to be some who are poets in prose, but whose poetry forsakes them the moment they attempt to embody their ideas in verse, and one of these undoubtedly was Mrs. Radcliffe."—Edin. Rev., July, 1834, 337–340.

"Mrs. Radcliffe's verses are unworthy of her romances. In the latter she was what Mr. Mathias called her, 'a mighty magician,'—or, not to lose the fine sound of his whole phrase, 'the mighty magician of Udolpho,' [supra] In her verses she is a tinselled nymph in a pantomime, calling up commonplaces with a wand."—LEIGH HUNT. Rev. Women, and Books, vol. ii. Specimens of British Poets, (Men. A. Dyce's, 1827.) See, also, Lon. Month. Rev., cx, 280, U. S. Lit. Gaz., vi, 1.

The reader will find further details respecting Mrs. Radcliffe and her works in the Memoirs of Talfourd and Mrs. Elwood above referred to, and a short and imperfect notice of her career (in 1858) in Jeaffreson's Novels and Novelists, ii, 1–6.

Lord Byron was an admirer and also a borrower (certainly in Childe Harold, and apparently in Don Juan) from the authoress of the Mysteries of Udolpho.

Rainoldes, Rainolds, Rainolds, Reginaldus, or Reynolds, John, D D., 1549–1607, a native of Pinhoe, Devonshire, England, became a student of Merton College, Oxford, 1562, was admitted to Corpus Christi College, 1563, and there chosen Probationer Fellow, 1566; Dean of Lincoln, 1593, President of Corpus Christi College, (for which office he refused a bishopric,) 1598. It was chiefly by the influence of this great Hebraist that King James ordered the new translation of the Bible, of which he made a small portion and criticised (at the weekly meetings of the translators in his chambers) much more. He pub a number of separate sermons, treatises, against the Church of Rome, and some other theological productions, for a list of which see Wood's Athen Oxon., Bliss's ed., ii, 11–19, and his Annals. 1. Sex Theses de S Scriptura et Ecclesia, Lon., 1580; Rupellæ, 1586, Lon., 1602, 8vo; in English, 1598, 12mo, 1609, 4to. 2. The Summe of the Conference between Iohn Rainoldes and Iohn Hart touching the Head and Faith of the Church, &c., 1584, 4to; 1588, 4to, 1598, 4to; 1609, 4to, Latine, Oxon, 1619, fol. 3. *Orationes duæ in Coll. He compiled a Dictionary of the Abnaki Language, (1691, 4to, pp. 500,) the MS. of which is in the Harvard College Library. It was pub. in 1833 in the New Series of the Memoirs of the American Academy; vol. 1, edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by John Pickering, LL.D., who, in the Appendix to his Orthography of the Indian Languages of North America, 1818, had expressed a strong desire (in which Baron William von Humboldt and other philologists united) to see it in print. Raleigh, Carew, 1604–1666, son of Sir Walter Raleigh, first saw the light in the Tower of London, where his father was a prisoner, and was educated at Wadham College, Oxford; was obliged to accept the reversion of his mother's pension (£400) instead of his inheritance; married the widow of Sir Anthony Ashley, (by whom he had two sons and three daughters,) and was soon afterwards made one of the Gentlemen of the King's Privy Chamber; in 1659, by the favour of General Monk, was appointed Governor of Jersey. In 1645 he wrote (see Howell's Letters) a vindication of his father against statements made by James Howell relative to the mine-affair at Guiana; and was also author of 1. Raleigh, Philip, a grandson of Sir Walter Raleigh, prepared for publication his grandfather's Remains, his Premonition to Princess, and probably the Abridgment of his History of the World. See RALEGH, SIR WALTER.

Raleigh, Raleigh, Rawley, Rawley, Raughley, Rawley, or Rawleigh, Sir Walter, 1552–1618, the second son of Walter Raleigh and his third wife, Catherine, daughter of Sir Philip Champernown, and widow of Otho Gilbert, Esq., (father by her of Sir John, Sir Adrian, and Sir Humphrey Gilbert,) first opened his eyes on his father's farm, called Haye's, in the parish of East Budleigh, near the coast of Devonshire. He was entered a commoner of Oriol College, Oxford, in or about 1568; in 1569 enrolled himself with the volunteer corps which, under Henry Champernown, visited France to fight the battles of the Huguenots, served five years in France, and subsequently in the Netherlands under the Prince of Orange; in 1579 accompanied his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, on an expedition to North America, from which he returned without success, in 1580 was captain of a company of the royal troops sent to Ireland to suppress the Earl of Desmond's rebellion; in 1581 was associated with Sir William Morgan in the government of Munster, in 1582, by a good use of his dress and address, ingratiated himself with Queen Elizabeth, and was shortly afterwards knighted, made Captain of the Guard, Seneschal of the County of Cornwall, and Lord Warden of the Stannaries; also received a grant of 12,000 acres of the forfeited estates of the Earl of Desmond, and a lucrative patent for licensing the vendors of wine in England; in 1583 subscribed £2000 to the unfortunate expedition which cost Gilbert his life, (see GILBERT, SIR HUMPHREY, supra;) in 1584 obtained a patent empowering him to appropriate, plant, and govern any territories that he might acquire in North America, (see HARRIOT, or HARRIOT, THOMAS, supra, and authorities there cited;) in 1587, after expending £40,000 in his attempt to colonize Virginia, transferred his patent to a company of merchants and others, and in the same year was appointed one of the Council of War, and had command of the forces in Cornwall, of which county he was Lieutenant-General; in 1588 furnished a ship and men to the expedition against the Spanish Armada, and was rewarded by an augmentation of his patent on wines, and the right to lay tonnage and poundage on them; in 1589 accompanied the Lisbon expedition under Drake and Norris, and on his return home visited Spenser the poet at the castle of Kilcolman, in Ireland, (see Spenser's Colin Clouts Come Home Againe.) in 1592 sailed with fifteen ships to intercept the Spanish fleet, but was recalled by the Queen, and on his return was imprisoned in the Tower in consequence of an intrigue with Miss Elizabeth (daughter of Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, one of the Queen's Maids of Honour, (also sent to the Tower,) who became his devoted wife, after a short banishment from the court, during which he projected the discovery and conquest of El Dorado, on February 5th, 1595, he sailed from Plymouth with five vessels, arrived at Trinidad about the end of March, surprised the town of San Josef and captured the Governor, and ascended the Orinoco about sixty leagues; returned to England towards the end of summer, and in the next year delighted the world with his Discoverie of the Large, Rich, and Beautiful Empire of Guiana, 4to, pp. 112, (Latine, Norib., 1599, 4to; Dutch, 1612, 4to, and in Hakluyt's Collections, &c.) in 1595 was employed, with the rank of rear-admiral, at the taking of Cadiz, where he was wounded in the leg; in 1597 took Fayal, and about the same time was restored to his post of Captain of the Guard, and appointed Governor of Jersey, as a member of the House of Commons, gained favour by his advocacy of the free use of capital and labour, but as a politician incurred severe censure by his ungenerous hostility to the Earl of Essex and his abuse of his own Court interest in his treatment of Essex's adherents on the accession of James I. fell into disgrace and danger, was committed to the Tower, on a charge of complicity with Cobham's treason, July, 1602, and tried and found guilty on that indictment, September, 1603, was deprived of his estates in favour of Carr, afterwards Duke of Somerset, and lay a prisoner in the Tower for thirteen years, during which he composed his greatest work, the History of the World, and many minor productions, in 1615, by bribery of great men, and a promise to open a mine in Guiana, was released conditionally from prison, and subsequently equipped thirteen vessels for his American expedition, reached the coast of Guiana in November, 1617, and, being himself too unwell to ascend the Orinoco, despatched Captain Lawrence Keymis, who for twenty days (after an assault on St. Thomas, in which Raleigh's son was slain) searched unsuccessfully for the coveted mine, and committed suicide shortly after his return, arrived at Plymouth, July, 1618, and was arrested by Sir Lewis Stukley, (q. v.) Vice-Admiral of Devonshire: adjudged by the Council (who desired to please the King of England and King of Spain) to be civilly dead by virtue of his former sentence, (September, 1603;) received sentence of death before the Court of King's Bench, October 28th, 1618, and beheaded the next morning, dying like a soldier and a Christian, in the sixty-sixth year of his age.

The sad tidings of the execution of this great man were received by the people of England with execrations so loud, deep, and long-continued that a venal council and an ungrateful king were at length alarmed, and made a lame attempt to justify their cruel deed:

"The dissatisfaction at the proceedings against Sir Walter was so general and public, that, in order to appease it, the King found it expedient to vindicate himself in a private declaration, [A Declaration of the Demeanor and Carriage of Sir Walter Raleigh, Knights, &c., Lon., 1618, 4to, pp. 68, J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, 108, £1 4s. Reprinted in Harl. Miscell., vol. iii.,] setting forth every minute particular that could be urged in his own favour. This paper appeared in public, signed with the names of nine Privy-Councillors; yet did it not prove sufficient to allay the murmurs of the people, several of those particulars being observed to be misrepresented, and others appeared in a great measure aggravated. Hence the cry still continued that Raleigh was sacrificed to the Spaniard."—Life of Raleigh, in Biog. Brit., 1760, v. 3483.

And so, undoubtedly, he was; and this can be well maintained without the necessity of proving that he who thus died a martyr always lived a saint. But we shall, ere we have done with this article, refer the reader to abundant sources of information—inculpatory, exculpatory, censorious, and eulogistic—respecting this eminent character,—one of the most distinguished in the English annals.

"He was a tall, handsome, and bold man," remarks an ancient chronicler, "but his nose [blemish, or weakness] was that he was damnable proud: he had a most remarkable aspect; an exceeding high forehead, long-faced, and 'sour eledided, a kind of pigge-eie.' . . . I have heard my gr. mother say that when she was young they were wont to talk of this rebue, viz.:

'The enemy to the stomach and the word of disgrace is the name of a gentleman with a bold face . . . When the English nobles met and received him, [King James,] being told upon their presentation to his majesty their names, when Sir W. R.'s name was told, 'Raleigh,' said the King, 'On my soule, mon, I have rarely heard of thee.' . . . He took a pipe of tobacco a little before he went to the scaffold, which some formal persons were scandalized at, but I think 'twas well and properly done, to settle his spirits'—Minutes of Lives, by John Aubrey, Esq., 1680.

Sir Walter was, as before remarked, the author of many works, and the reputed author of others, some of which he probably never saw. In the lists of Oldys and Birch in their Lives of Raleigh, (see, also, Biog. Brit., 1760, v. 484,) and that by Wood, augmented by Bliss, (Athen. Oxon., ed. 1813–20, ii. 240–249,) together with the late authorities noticed below, the bibliographer will find enough to perplex his judgment, and the scholar much to gratify his taste. The catalogue of the contents of the only edition of his writings which can pretend to any thing like completeness—The Works of Sir Walter Raleigh, Kt., now first collected, to which are prefixed the Lives of the Author, by Oldys and Birch, Oxford, 1829, 8 vols. 8vo, £3 15s., in sheets—runs as follows: vol. i., Advertisement, Life, by William Oldys; Life, by Thomas Birch, M.A.; The Trial of Sir W. Raleigh. Speech and Behaviour on the Scaffold, vols. ii–vii., History of the World, [with Chronological Tables and Index, in vol. vii.] vol. viii., Maxims of State, The Cabinet Council, containing The Chief Arts of Empire, The Prerogative of Parliaments; On a Match between Lady Elizabeth and the Prince of Piedmont; On a Marriage between Prince Henry and a Daughter of Savoy; A Discourse of War in General; A Discourse touching a War with Spain; A Discourse of the Invention of Ships, Anchors, Compass, &c.; Observations on the Navy and Sea Service, Observations touching Trade and Commerce; The Discovery of Guiana, Apology for his Voyage to Guiana; The Reign of William I., On the Seat of Government; Causes of the Magnificence and Opulence of Cities; The Sceptic, Instructions to his Son and to Posterity, A Treatise of the Soul; A Discourse of Tenures which were before the Conquest; Letters; Additional Correspondence, A Relation of Cadix Action, 1596, Spanish Alarm, 1596; Orders to Commanders; The Advice of a Loving Son to his Aged Father; Poems.

RALEIGH AS A PROSE WRITER.

"Mark when a bold expressive thought appears,
Bright through the rubbish of some hundred years;
Command old words that long have slept to wake,— Words that wise Bacon or brave Raleigh spake."

POPE Imitations of Horace, book II., Epist. II.

Raleigh's Maxims of State, The Cabinet Council, The Jeopie, and Advice to his Son, and his History of the World, are about all of his prose works now known (we do not venture to say familiar) to students of English literature. The critic of the Retrospective Review, in an article on his Remains, already referred to, remarks,

"Sir Walter Raleigh's thoughts are astute, and his language pregnant and expressive. There is something captivating in the mixture we find in his writings of forcible and uncommon thought and striking metaphor, which are so amalgamated as to be inseparable. The one is not appended to the other for the sake of ornament, but is its natural language, and is as necessary to its existence as the bark to the tree.

"His Advice to his Son in the Choice of a Wife is so excellent in its kind, that we shall introduce the whole of it though, to say the truth, it betrays almost as much cunning as wisdom. . . . His rules for the preservation of a man's estate are equally pertinent and just, although it cannot be denied that they savour of a sad experience and worldliness. . . . Sir Walter is very severe on the vice of drunkenness. . . . The Skeptic is a piece of ingenious sophistry, which displays the versatility of the author's mind. . . . This collection also contains several of Sir Walter Raleigh's Letters, amongst which there are two to his wife, which manifest great kindness and affection. The one written after his condemnation is so beautiful and affecting, that we shall introduce a portion of it in this place"—Vol. II., 1820, 329, 331, 332, 336, 339.

We proceed to notice our author's principal production:

THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD, Part 1, extending to the End of the Macedonian Empire, [B.C. 167,] Lon., 1614, fol., (see Gent. Mag., Oct. 1851, 391, Drake's Raleigh, 7, n.); 1628, fol.; 1652, fol.; 1666, fol., 1670, fol.; with his Life and Trial, 1677, fol.; 1687, fol.; with his Life by Wm. Oldys, and Trial, 11th ed., and the best of the old eds., 1736, 2 vols. fol. Alexander Ross pub. Animadversions, &c. on this work, 1653, 8vo, and strictures upon it in his Marrow of History, 2d ed., 1602, 8vo, preceded, in 1652, by The History of the World, the Second Part, in Six Books; being a Continuation of Sir Walter Raleigh's, folio. This is not commended by Granger:

"Our author's [Ross's] great work is 'A Continuation of Sir Walter Raleigh's History of the World' This is like a piece of bad Gothic tacked to a magnificent pile of Roman architecture, which serves to heighten the effect of it, while it exposes its own deficiency in strength and beauty"—Biog. Hist. of Eng., 5th ed., 1824, lii 323.

An Abridgment of Raleigh's History of the World, (see RALEIGH, PHILIP,) together with his Premonition to Princes, appeared in 1698, 8vo, again, 1700, 8vo, 1702, 8vo, 4th ed., with a Continuation, 1708, 4 vols. 8vo. The whole work was reprob., together with the Voyage to Guiana, (ut supra), in 1820, 6 vols. 8vo., and again in the collective ed. of his Works, (vols. II.-VII.), 1829, 8 vols. 8vo. There is an absurd story—still repeated by moralizing anecdotists who insist upon garnishing truisms with platitudes, to the unbounded admiration of family circles and festal convocations—that Raleigh had completed a Second Part of his History, reaching to his own period, but that his disgust at the discrepancies of testimony on the part of two persons who had, with himself, just witnessed an occurrence in the Tower, caused him to throw his manuscripts into the fire, protesting that it was not worth while to attempt to faithfully represent the past, when it seemed impossible to obtain a correct relation of the present. That a man of the historian's large experience should have been obliged to wait until his sixty-second year for his first doubt of the infallibility of human testimony is not the least remarkable fact connected with his extraordinary career.

It is proper to quote some opinions respecting the merits of Raleigh's History of the World,—not omitting to notice, in passing, that Mr. Disraeli's suspicious (Secret History of Rawleigh's History of the World) that the knight's share in the work was much less than is generally supposed, seem to have been dissipated, in public estimation, by Bolton Corney, (New Curiosities of Literature,) P. F. Tytler, (Life of Raleigh,) and Macvey Napier, (Lord Bacon and Sir Walter Raleigh.) This being assumed, it is fair to again present in evidence the commendation of the historian of England, which Mr. Disraeli endeavoured to have ruled out of court as founded upon a misapprehension of the premises.

"They were struck with the extensive genius of the man who, being educated amidst naval and military enterprises, had surpassed in the pursuits of literature even those of the most reclusive and sedentary lives; and they admired his unbroken magnanimity, which, at his age and under his circumstances could engage him to undertake and execute so great a work as his History of the World"—HUME: Hist. of England, ch. xlviii.

Again:

"Raleigh is the best model of that ancient style which some would revive at present"—Ibid., ch. xlix., Appendix.

We continue our quotations.

"Hoc autem sequi possunt nonnulli ex recentioribus. quos inter, principem locum obtinere meretur Gualterus Raulius nostras, eques auratus, vir clari nominis, et ob singularem fortitudinem ac prudentiam meliori flatu dignus. Is universalem historiam ab initio mundi usque Macedonici imperii, sive tertius monarchie occasum, ex probatissimis auctoribus cognovit, nostræ quidem gentis idiomate versaculo, sed accurato admodum iudicio, methodo perspicua, stylo eleganti ac virili." &c.—DEBERT WHITEHEAD Lect. Hænal de Raulione et Methodo Legendi Hist. Civ. et Eccl., (Lon., 1823, 8vo, &c.) Sect. VI.

"Sir Walter Raleigh has, in my opinion, treated ancient history with more strength and dignity than any other modern writer of any other nation"—SPELMAN.

"Take heed of an unactive and vain spirit—recreate yourself with Sir Walter Raleigh's Historie; its a bodie of historie, and will add much more to your understanding than fragments of storie."—O. CROMWELL. Letter to his son Richard, April, 1650.

"The attempt of Raleigh is deservedly celebrated for the labour of his researches and the elegance of his style; but he has endeavoured to exert his judgment more than his genius, so select facts rather than to adorn them, and has produced a historical dissertation, but seldom risen to the majesty of history."—DR. JOHNSON's Rambler, No. 122.

"The History of Sir Walter Raleigh must place him in our esteem, when we consider the barbarous language with which he struggled"—R. POLWHELL Goodhugh's E G Lib Ann, 165.

"The design was equal to the greatness of his mind, and the execution to the strength of his parts and the variety of his learning. His style is pure, nervous, and majestic, and much better suited to the dignity of history than that of Lord Bacon. Raleigh seems to have written for posterity; Bacon, for the reign of James the First. . . . This admirable work of Raleigh has been thought a just model for the reformation of our languages"—GRANGE Brog Hist. of Eng, 6th ed., 1824, ii. 140.

"His digressions are never more agreeable than when they become dissertations; the most ordinary events of history assume a new face by the noble speculations which he builds on them,—full of a searching critical spirit, of sound morality, and of practical policy; often profound, always eloquent"—DIRAZELI Amer. of Lit., Psychological Hist. of Raleigh.

"His unfinished History of the World leaves us to regret that later ages had not been celebrated by his eloquence"—Ibid., Curiosities of Lit.: Imprisonment of the Learned.

Dirazeli also remarks,

"He who wishes for power of intellect and grandeur of soul must study profoundly Raleigh's History of the World," and he declares (Amen. of Lit.) that "the most material characteristic of his work Raleigh could borrow from no one,—the tone and elevation of his genius."

And this citation brings us back for a moment to the suspicions announced with so much confidence by Mr. Dirazeli and disputed with equal courage by the critics Corney, Tytler, and Napier. From the last-named we must quote at least one sentence on this subject

"We hold it to be demonstrable, by a critical examination of the work itself, that it is throughout the composition of a single mind, bearing, as it does, in every paragraph, the impress of a unity and identity of literary labour which could only exist in the workmanship of one and the same hand. By no analysis of its structure, sequences, and wording could it possibly be shown that there are in it any differences of composition justifying the ascription of passages of one order to Raleigh and the rest to others"—Edin. Rev., April, 1840, 70 Sir Walter Raleigh.

"Of its style, the fine passages above extracted will partly furnish the means of judging, but it would be necessary to peruse in continuation some considerable portion of the narrative on Greek and Roman affairs, to have any just conception of its easy and equitable flow, its clearness and animation, its sweetness and melody in the plaintive parts, and its general strength and dignity. In the structure of his periods there was no writer of his age so entirely free from stiffness and pedantry"—Ibid., 68.

"Vigorous, purely English, and possessing an antique richness of ornament similar to what pleases us when we see some ancient priory or stately manor-house and compare it with our modern mansions. The work is laborious without being heavy, learned without being dry, acute and ingenious without degenerating into the subtle but trivial distinctions of the Schoolmen. Its narrative is clear and spirited, and the matter collected from the most authentic sources. But perhaps its most striking feature is the sweet tone of philosophic melancholy which pervades the whole. Written in prison during the quiet evening of a tempestuous life, we feel, in its perusal, that we are the companions of a superior mind, nursed in contemplation, and chastened and improved by sorrow, in which the bitter recollection of injury and the asperity of resentment have passed away, leaving only the heavenly lesson that all is vanity"—P. F. TYTLER Life of Sir Walter Raleigh.

Warburton thought that the concluding paragraphs ("By this which we have already set down," &c.) had never been equalled by any writer but Milton; and Lord Grenville esteemed the apostrophe

"O eloquent, just, and mighty Death!" one of the finest, if not the finest, passage in English prose"—Rogers's Recollec., 1859, 135.

Mr. Rogers also tells us that the fastidious Charles James Fox allowed Raleigh to be a very fine writer, (ubi supra, 43.)

"The great historians of this period, who condescended to use their native tongue, were Raleigh, Hayward, Knolles, Bacon, and Daniel, writers who, in this province, still hold no inferior rank among the classics of their country. The 'History of the World,' by Sir Walter, exhibits great strength of style and much solid dity of judgment."—DR. DRAKE Shakesp. and his Times, 1817, i. 476.

"Raleigh's History of the World is a proof of the respect for laborious learning that had long distinguished Europe. The Greek and Roman story is told more fully and exactly than by any earlier English author, and with a plain eloquence which has given this book a classical reputation in our language, though from its length, and the want of that critical sifting of facts which we now justly demand, it is not greatly read. There is little now obsolete in the words of Raleigh, nor, to any great degree, in his turns of phrase; the periods, when pains have been taken with them, show that artificial structure which we find in Sidney and Hooker; he is less pedantic than most of his contemporaries, seldom low, never affected."—HALLAM's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 140.

RALEIGH AS A POET.

To an eminent bibliographer, whose services to English literature are commended on a preceding page, (272,) we are indebted for Poems of Sir Walter Raleigh, now first Collected; with a Biographical and Critical Introduction, by Sir S. E. Brydges, Kent, Lee Priory Press, 1813, 4to; Lon., Longman's Private Press, 1814, 12mo. In 1845 appeared, in 1 vol. fp. 8vo, Poems by Sir Henry Wotton, Sir Walter Raleigh, and others; edited by the Rev. John Hannah, late Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. See Lon. Athen., 1846, 11, and 1861, i. 424, 469. Among the best-known of Raleigh's poems are The Country's Receptions; A Vision upon the Concert of Spenser's Faerie Queene; The Nymph's Reply to the Passionate Shepherd, (authorship questioned,) The Excuse written by Sir Walter Raleigh in his Younger Years; and Sir Walter Raleigh in the Unquiet Rest of his Last Sickness. The last two are not in Brydges's collection, for which omission Dr. Drake takes the editor to task.

"For amatory sweetness and pastoral simplicity," observes the Doctor, "few efforts will be found to surpass the poems distinguished as 'Phyllida's Love-Call,' 'The Shepherd's Description of Love,' the 'Answer to Marlowe,' and 'The Silent Lover.'"—Shakesp. and his Times, i. 640. See, also, 578, 639.

"For ditty and amorous ode I find Sir Walter Rawleygh's wayne most lofty, insolent, [unusual,] and passionate"—PURTEHAM Arte of English Poetrie.

"The English poems of Sir Walter Raleigh are not easily to be mended"—BOLTON.

"A votary of whom the Muses cannot but be proud"—HEADLEY. "Do I pronounce Raleigh a poet? Not, perhaps, in the judgment of a severe criticism. Raleigh, in his better days, was too much occupied in action to have cultivated all the powers of a poet, which require solitude and perpetual meditation, and a refinement of sensibility, such as intercourse with business and the world desolates. . . . We have no proof that Raleigh possessed the copious, vivid, and creative powers of Spenser, nor is it probable that any cultivation would have brought forth from him fruit equally rich. But even in the careless fragments now presented to the reader I think we can perceive some traits of attraction and excellence which perhaps even Spenser wanted. If less diversified than that gifted bard, he would, I think, have sometimes been more forcible and sublime. His images would have been more gigantic, and his reflections more daring."—SIR S. E. BRYDGES Biog and Crit. Introduc. to Raleigh's Poems, 1813, 4to.

See, also, Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 152; H. Neale's Lects. on Eng. Poet., Lect. VI.; Ed. Rev., xlii. 53.

We conclude with RALEIGH'S CHARACTERISTICS.

"How much he excelled, both in feats of arms and in strength of counsel, has been seen in the course of this memoir; and for arts we need but peruse the books he wrote in the poetical, epistolary, military, maritimal, geographical, political, philosophical, and historical way, the number, as well as value of which is so great, that, considering his continual avocations, it becomes matter of wonder how he could find time to collect so much force of mind and attention as was necessary to write them. But the wonder ceases when we know the division he made of the day, four hours only of which he allowed to sleep, and for the rest he dedicated four hours to reading and study, two to discourse, and the remainder to business and other necessities. He had an excellent library, which was of use sometimes to Mr. Selden, and others of the Society of Antiquaries, of which he was a member"—DR. BIRCH Life of Raleigh, in Eng. Brit., v. (1760,) 3484.

"A man of so great abilities that neither that nor the preceding reign produced his equal. His character was a combination of almost every eminent quality, he was the soldier, statesman, and scholar united, and had he lived with the heroes of antiquity he would have made a just parallel to Cæsar and Xenophon,—like them, being equal master of the sword and the pen"—Cibber's Lives, i. (1763,) 199.

"The sons of Beth said unto Abraham, Thou art a great prince amongst us, in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead, none shall withhold them from thee." So may we say to the memory of this worthy knight, "Repose yourself in this our catalogue under what topic you please, of statesman, seaman, soldier, learned writer, and what not." His work unlocks our choicest cabinets, and provides both room and welcome to entertain him. . . . Indeed, it was true of him what was said of Cato Uticensis, that he seemed to be born to that only which he went about, so dexterous was he in all his undertakings, in court, in camp, by sea, by land, with sword, with pen; witness in the last his 'History of the World,' wherein the only defect (or defect rather) [was] that it wanted one-half thereof."—FULLER's Worthies of Eng., ed. 1840, i. 419.

See, also, the Life of Raleigh, prefixed to his History of the World, ed. 1614.

"Sir Walter Raleigh, the most extraordinary genius of his own or perhaps any other time, a penetrating statesman, an accomplished courtier, a deep scholar, a fine writer, a fine soldier, and one of the ablest seamen in the world. This vast genius that pierced so far and ran through so many things war of a fiery, eccentric kind, which led him into daring expeditions and uncommon projects, which not being understood by a timid prince, and envied and hated by the rivals he had in so many ways of life, ruined him at last."—Account of the European Sea

Settlements in America, 2d ed., 1758, ii. 217. See BURKE, EDMUND, p. 289.

"Sir Walter Raleigh, . . . one of the most extraordinary men that ever appeared in a country abounding in singular characters. . . . He was passionately fond of every thing that was magnificent, he enjoyed a reputation superior to that of the greatest men, he had more knowledge than those whose immediate pursuit was learning, he possessed a freedom of thinking uncommon in those days, and had a kind of romantic turn in his sentiments and behaviour."—ABRAHAM RAYNAL, European Settlements in the W and E Indies, vi. 21.

"After a lapse of nearly two centuries, [in 1792,] the State of North Carolina by a solemn act of legislation revived in its capital 'the City of Raleigh,' thus expressing its grateful respect for the memory of the extraordinary man who limited in himself as many kinds of glory as were ever combined in an individual."—GEORGE BANCROFT, Hist. of the U. States, ii, chap. 3.

"It is by a frequent contemplation of such lofty and splendid specimens of humanity as Sir Walter Raleigh that the modern character may be elevated and invigorated. . . . Surely there is something to be learnt from a man like this,—admiral, philosopher, statesman, historian, and poet, all in one,—first in some, distinguished in all; who, bold and adventurous in discovery, whether moral or geographical, untamed in war and indefatigable in literature, as inexhaustible in ideas as in exploits, after having brought a new world to light, wrote the history of the old in a prison."—LON RETROSPEC. REV., ii., 1820, 340. See, also, vii., 1823, 317.

"There is no object in human pursuits which the genius of Raleigh did not embrace. What science was that unwearying mind not buried in? What arts of hoar antiquity did he not love to seek? What sense of the beautiful ever passed transiently over his spirit? His books and his pictures ever accompanied him in his voyages. Even in the short hour before his last morning, is he not still before us, while his midnight pen traces his mortuary verse, perpetuating the emotions of the sage, and of the hero who could not fear death!"—DIBRAELI, Amen. of Lat. : Psychological Hist. of Raleigh.

"Raleigh, the soldier, the sailor, the scholar, the courtier, the orator, the poet, the historian, the philosopher; whom we picture to ourselves sometimes reviewing the Queen's guards, sometimes giving chase to a Spanish galleon, then answering the chiefs of the country party in the House of Commons, then again murmuring one of his sweet love-songs too near the ears of her Highness's maids of honour, and soon after poring over the Talmud, or collating Polybius with Livy."—LORD MACAULAY, Edin. Rev., April, 1832, and in his Civ. and Hist. Essays, ed. 1854, i. 496.

It will be remembered that the author of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, long before the inception of that immortal production, after successively choosing and rejecting for historical treatment the Crusade of Richard the First, the Barons' Wars against John and Henry the Third, the History of Edward the Black Prince, the Lives and Comparisons of Henry V. and the Emperor Titus, the Life of Philip Sydney and that of the Marquis of Montrose, thus announces his resolution—

"At length I have fixed on Sir Walter Raleigh for my hero. His eventful story is varied by the characters of the soldier and the sailor, the courtier and historian, and it may afford such a fund of materials as I desire, which have not yet been properly manufactured."—GIBBON'S Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 68, 439.

After nearly a twelvemonth of preliminary investigation, (vide p. 70, ut supra), this hero, too, was dropped, (for insufficient reasons, we think,) and thus the world lost that which would have certainly been a great, what could not have been a satisfactory, performance. The time to write the Life of Raleigh had not then arrived it is now here: "The hour's come, but where's the man?" What a grand prospect opens to the imagination when we contemplate the title—The Life and Times of Sir Walter Raleigh! For—let it never be forgotten so long as it remains true!—the literary and political history of the reign of Elizabeth is as yet unwritten. We shall not pause to offer the evidence; for he who would ask for the proof could hardly comprehend it if presented. See SAINT JOHN, JAMES AUGUSTUS, at end.

In this second Trial—in this late "Relation of Sir Walter Raleigh's Troubles"—we have summoned many witnesses of great name to the judicial bar: let us not forget the sweet singer who welcomed, at the castle of Kilcolman, the brave admiral and fellow-poet on his return from the expedition designed to place the unfortunate Antonio on the Portuguese throne:

TO THE RIGHT NOBLE AND VALEROUS KNIGHT, SIR WALTER RALEIGH, LORD WARDEN OF THE STANNETTES, AND LIEFTENANT OF CORNEWALL

"To thee, that art the summer's nightingale,
The souveraine goddesses most deare delight,
Why doe I send this rusticke madrigale,
That may thy tunefull eare unseason quite?
Thou onely fit this argument to write,
In whose high thoughts Pleasure had built her bowre,
And daintie Love leard sweetly to indite.
My rimes I know unsauory and sowe,
To taste the streames, that like a golden showre
Flow from thy fruitfull head, of thy louses praise,— Fitter perhapse to thunder martiall stowe,
When so thee list thy lofty Muse to raise:

Yet till that thou thy poems wilt make knowne, Let thy faire Cynthias praises be thus rudely shewne."
EDMUND SPENSER.

Raleigh, Walter, D.D., 1586–1646, second son of Sir Carew Raleigh, who was elder brother of Sir Walter Raleigh, was educated at Magdalene College, Oxford; Rector of Chedsoy, Somersetshire, 1620; Chaplain to Charles I., 1630; Prob. of Wells, 1634–5, Dean of Wells, 1641; Rector of Streat, with the Chapel of Walton, Wiltshire; sequestered and imprisoned in his house during the Rebellion, and stabbed by his jailer, when endeavouring to secrete a letter from his impertinent curiosity. 1. Reliquiæ Raleighianæ; being Discourses and Sermons on Several Subjects; with Account of the Author, by Bp. Ralph, James, probably a native of Philadelphia, Penna., in 1724 accompanied Benjamin Franklin to London, without waiting for the company of his wife, for whose loss he seems to have consoled himself in no great time. In his new home he found it convenient to borrow the name and money (his theological speculations he had already adopted) of his philosophic friend, and essayed, without much success, to instruct the young in the school and to amuse their elders on the stage. He subsequently secured the notice of Bubb Dodington, Lord Melcombe, and became known as a warm adherent of the faction of the Prince (Frederick) of Wales, a political journalist and pamphleteer, a dramatist, a poet, and a historian. Towards the close of Sir Robert Walpole's term of power he was "bought off" from the opposition by an income, and on the accession of George III. he was rewarded by the grant of a pension, but did not live to receive more than six months' income, dying at Chiswick of a fit of the gout, Jan. 24, 1762. 1. The Muse's Address to the King, an Ode, Lon., 1728, 8vo. 2. The Tempest, or, The Terrors of Death, a Poem, 1728, 8vo. 3. Night, a Poem, 1728, 8vo. Franklin says that he did all he could to dissuade Ralph from his resolution of becoming a poet, but without effect, as "he continued scribbling verses till Pope cured him." The dose which Pope administered was this—

"Silence, ye Wolves, while Ralph to Cynthia howls,
And makes night hideous. Answer him, ye owls!"

"We have not met with a poorer book of its kind than this for a very long time . . . Their authorities are of the very commonest kind, their reading is of the very loosest character, and their conception of the requirements of their subjects is little less than absurd. The book is bad enough in all conscience for one man to have done, but it becomes a marvel of short-coming as the sum of the powers of two . . . Ramsay, Allan, 1685-1758, a native of Leadhills, Lanarkshire, Scotland, in 1701 removed to Edinburgh, and, after some experience as a wig-maker, engaged in the more congenial occupation of bookselling, (he was the founder of Circulating Libraries in Scotland,) which he made conducive to profit as well as pleasure. About 1736 he lost money by the erection of a play-house in Carrubers Close, (shut up—i. ever opened—by the act of 1737;) but he subsequently 'aid by enough (afterwards scattered) to justify his retiring from business and seeking rest in a house built by himself on the north side of Castle Hill, styled by the poet Ramsay Lodge, but, from its small size and peculiar shape, compared by the wags to "a goose pie,"—of which piece of facetiousness the occupant complained to his noble friend Lord Elhbank. The reply was not consolatory.

"What!" exclaimed his lordship, "a goose pie? In good faith, Allan, now that I see you in it, I think the house is not ill named."

About a hundred years after the date of this speech, another nobleman (Lord Murray) determined to honour the memory of the author of The Gentle Shepherd for a marble monument; and we presume that ere long (and for a long season) the visitor to Edinburgh will be pleased with the opportunity of paying at the same time a tribute to the gratitude of the living and the genius of the dead Ramsay's publications in book form are the following.

1. Christ's Kirk on the Green, Edin., 1716, (see JAMES I., KING OF SCOTLAND) From an old MS., with an additional canto by Ramsay. 2d ed., 1718, 12mo. Containing a second original canto by Ramsay. 5 edits. were pub. in the four following years. From one of Ramsay's cantos Wilkie took his picture of the Husband and Wife. 2. Tartana, or, The Plaid, 8vo. 3. Scots Songs, 1718, 8vo. 4. Elegies on Maggy Johnson, John Cowper, and Lucky Wood, 1718, 8vo. These and other early effusions of Ramsay—The Scribblers Lashed, The City of Edinburgh, Address, Salutation, Familiar Epistles, &c.—were originally issued in separate sheets. 5. Fables and Tales, 1722, 1 vol. 6. The Fair Assembly, a Poem, 1723. 7. Health, a Poem, 1724. 8. The Tea-Table Miscellany, (Songs, English and Scottish,) 1724, &c., 4 vols. 12 edits in a few years. Music for the Collection was pub. separately in 6 Parts, by Ramsay, in 1725. He refitted about sixty of the old airs with new verses, partly by himself and partly by others.—Hamilton of Bangour, Robert Crawford, and Mallet. Ruddiman assisted in the Glossary. See Scott's Introductory Remarks, &c., ut infra. Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. ii., Blackw. Mag., xiv. 6. 9. The Evergreen, being a Collection of Scots Poems wrote by the Ingenious before 1600, 1724, 2 vols. 12mo, new ed., 1761, 2 vols. sm. 8vo. He introduced into this collection (not well edited) two pieces of his own,—The Vision and The Eagle and Robin-Redbreast.

"But the first editor who seems to have made a determined effort to preserve our ancient popular poetry was the well-known Allan Ramsay, in his Evergreen, containing chiefly extracts from the ancient Scottish Makers, whose poems have been preserved in the Bannatyne Manuscript, but exhibiting amongst them some popular ballads."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Introductory Remarks on Popular Poetry (q. v.) prefixed to Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. See, also, Blackw. Mag., xxxvii. 288.

10. The Gentle Shepherd; a Scots Pastoral Comedy, 1725. Patie and Roger had already been pub. in the author's vol. of Poems, 1720, 12mo, and Jenny and Maggy in the ed. of his Poems, 1721, 4to. These reappeared in The Gentle Shepherd. There have been many edits of this, the best-known of Ramsay's productions. We notice the following. I. With a Glossary and plates by David Allan, Glasgow, by Foulis, 1788, 4to. II. With Illustrations of the Scenery, Memoirs of David Allan, Life of Ramsay, Glossary, &c., Edin., 1808, 2 vols. 8vo.; i. p. r. 8vo. III. With Select Poems People's ed., new ed., Lon., 1850, r. 8vo. IV. With Life, Lon., 1851, 18mo. V. With Life, Criticisms, Glossary, and Cat. of Scottish Poets, N. York, W. Gowans, 1852, 12mo. It was trans. into English by Cornelius Vanderstop, Lon., 1777, 8vo, by William Ward, 1785, 8vo; by Margaret Turner, 1790, 8vo. Pope and Gay (a loungee in Ramsay's book-store when in Edinburgh with the Duke and Duchess of Queensberry) were among the warmest admirers of the Scots Pastoral Comedy. Ramsay's name is often mentioned in connection with that of Burns; and by one of our modern critics The Gentle Shepherd is thus introduced in comparison with the effusions of the later poet:

"Ramsay had not the force of Burns; but neither, in just proportion to his merits, is he likely to be felt by an English reader

The fire of Burns's wit and passion glows through an obscure dialect by its confinement to short and concentrated bursts. The latest which Ramsay excites is spread over a long poem, delineating manners more than passions; and the mind must be at home both in the language and manners to appreciate the skill and comic archness with which he has heightened the display of rustic character without giving it vulgarity, and refined the view of peasant life by situations of sweetness and tenderness without departing in the least degree from its simplicity. Like the poetry of Tasso and Ariosto, that of 'The Gentle Shepherd' is engraven on the memory of its native country. Its verses have passed into proverbs; and it continues to be the delight and solace of the peasantry whom it describes."—Campbell's Specimens. Ramsay. See, also, his comments on Spenser "Exhibited rusticity without vulgarity, and elegant sentiment without affectation."—Roscoe Lorenzo de Medici, vol. i.

"I must not omit the mention of another pastoral drama, which will bear being brought into comparison with any composition of this kind, in any language, that is, Allan Ramsay's 'Gentle Shepherd.' . . . But, though subject to these local disadvantages, which confine its reputation within narrow limits, it is full of so much natural description and tender sentiment as could do honour to any poet. The characters are well drawn, the incidents affecting, the scenery and manners lively and just."—Blair's Lects on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XLIX Pastoral Poetry.

"Theocritus was a pleasant Pastoral, and Sicily sees him among the stars. But all his dear Idyls together are not equal in worth to the single Gentle Shepherd."—John Wilson Blackw Mag, June, 1832, 966, repub. in the Recreations of Christopher North.

Boswell thought it so creditable to his country's genius that he offered to initiate his great preceptor into its beauties, but the prejudices of the Anti-Scotist were unconquerable.

"I spoke of Allan Ramsay's 'Gentle Shepherd,' in the Scottish Dialect, as the best pastoral that had ever been written, not only abounding with beautiful rural imagery and just and pleasing sentiments, but being a real picture of manners, and I offered to teach Dr Johnson to understand it. 'No, sir,' said he, 'I won't learn it. You shall retain your superiority by my not knowing it.'"—Boswell's Johnson, by Croker, ed. 1848, i. 8vo, 252.

At the sale of Lord Murray's library in Edinburgh, in 1862, a MS. copy of The Gentle Shepherd, and other MS. poems and songs, never published, were sold to William Chambers for 31 guineas.

Ramsay, Allan, Jr., 1713-1784, son of the preceding, and father of Major-General John Ramsay, of the Royal Army, of the wife of Sir Archibald Campbell, and of Mrs. Colonel Malcolm, was portrait-painter to, and a great favourite of, George III. Ramsay, Andrew Michael, LL.D., better known as the Chevalier de Ramsay, 1686-1743, a native of Ayr, Scotland, educated at the University of Edinburgh, LL.D., Oxford, 1730, became a convert to the religious and philosophical opinions of his excellent host, Archbishop Fenelon, and by his influence was appointed preceptor to the Prince de Turenne and the Duc de Château-Thierry. Whilst thus engaged, he was made a knight of the order of St. Lazarus, and subsequently was for one year tutor to the two sons of the Pretender, Charles Edward and Henry, (afterwards Cardinal de York,) at Rome. Revisiting Britain, he was received into the family of the Duke of Argyll, where he prepared for the press and superintended the publication of several of his works. He subsequently returned to France, and resided in the family of the Prince de Turenne, Duc de Bouillon, in the situation of intendant, until his death, which occurred at St.-Germain-en-Laye in his 57th year. His works are now almost forgotten, even by students of the French language, which Ramsay wrote with great purity.

He was for many years a member of the Legislature of South Carolina, and in 1782, '83, '84, and '85 served in the national Congress, of which he was for one year President. His death was occasioned by a pistol-wound received in the streets of Charleston, May 7, 1815, from the hands of a lunatic. He was a zealous advocate of American Independence, and of public improvements of every character, an accomplished scholar, a man of fervent piety and expansive benevolence, and distinguished for every social virtue. "With regard to Dr Ramsay's book, it is plainly an abridgment of Mr. Marshall's, written, we presume, upon the supposition that a moderate octavo is more likely to be read than five massy quartos. In other respects it bears all the lineaments of its bulky progenitor. It is quite as well written, and contains all the private history that is to be found in the other, but without the addition of one original sketch or anecdote. . . In these volumes [Marshall's and Ramsay's] we have found a great many words and phrases which English criticism refuses to acknowledge."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1806, 151, 170 Lives of Washington.

"He had, moreover, a more cultivated historical sense than Marshall, and used language more effectively. . . But his narrative, though clear, wants colour. It has movement without vivacity, distinctness without graphic power. He tells the story, but fails to paint the scenes or the men. And thus, with a kind of knowledge which none but a contemporary can possess, with ample materials to draw from, and abundant means of verifying every statement by direct conference with actors still in the full possession of their faculties, he has left us a meagre volume, which must always be consulted, though it will seldom be read."—GEORGE W. The three vols. were reviewed by a most competent critic, Abiel Holmes, D.D., in the North American Review, March, 1818, 331-344. Dr. Holmes, after an exhibition of the faults and merits of the work, concludes with the remark,

This Memoir was originally pub. in the Analectic Magazine, vol. vi. 204, (1815), and again appeared, with alterations, in the National Portrait-Gallery of Distinguished Americans, vol. iii. of ed. of 1836, and vol. ii. of ed. of 1852.

16. Universal History Americanised; or, An Historical View of the World from the Earliest Records to the Nineteenth Century; with a Particular Reference to the State of Society, Literature, Religion, and Form of Government of the United States of America, 1819, 12 vols. 8vo. Vols. i.-iii., first pub. 1816-17, have been already noticed: see No. 15. Ramsay's biographer calls this "his last and greatest work."

"With a view of reducing all valuable historical facts within a small compass, to form a digest for the use of those whose leisure would not admit of more extensive reading, this great work was undertaken."

To these volumes, first suggested in 1768 by a desire to abridge the Universal History, 65 vols., (see BOWER, ARCHIBALD, p. 227, supra.) Ramsay devoted many of his leisure hours for the space of forty years. The prospectus of the work ($3 per vol., in boards) will be found in the North American Review, Sept. 1815, 443-445: a notice of the first three volumes has been cited under No. 15. The remaining nine volumes seem to have failed to attract notice of any sort. they fell dead from the press and who can marvel who puzzles his brains over the thrice-absurd title of the work?

Ramsay commenced life under the brightest auspices: "It is saying but little of him," remarks no less a judge than Dr Rush, "to tell you that he is far superior to any person we ever graduated at our college: his abilities are not only good, but great, his talents and knowledge universal. I never saw so much strength of memory and imagination united to so fine a judgment. . . . He writes, talks, and—what is more—lives well. I can promise more for him in every thing than I could for myself"—Letter to Charleston, Sept. 16, 1773

We have seen that the record was preserved unblemished. As regards his literary capacity, we may appropriately quote a few lines from the pages of his biographer, already referred to:

"The great merit of Dr Ramsay as a writer is now generally acknowledged. We are sure that we but embody the opinion of literary men in this country when we say that, as an historian, Ramsay is faithful, judicious, and impartial, that his style is classical and chaste, and, if occasionally tinged by originality of idea or singularity of expression, it is perfectly free from affected obscurity or laboured ornament. Its energy of thought is tempered by its simplicity and beauty of style."

It is the verdict of Dr. Holmes, (N. Amer. Rev., March, 1818, 345),

"The style of Dr Ramsay is justly characterized [ut supra] in the Memoir of his Life."

"This life of Mr Jefferson is, in every sense, an authorized work. It was undertaken under the approbation of his family, with an unreserved access to the use of all the private papers of Mr Jefferson in their possession, and has received the benefit of their recollections and opinions at every step. The purely original matter comprises about one-third of the work"—Publisher's Advertisement.

Appended to this advertisement we find favourable opinions of the work from nearly ninety authorities, principally daily newspapers. On the other hand, very grave faults are charged upon the biographer by those who willingly admit that they have derived pleasure and profit from his voluminous record.

"The American public are under very great obligations to Dr Randall for this work, and at the same time have strong reasons to find fault with the mode of its execution. . . While Dr Randall's work has many of the merits of autobiography, it has more than its usual one-sidedness and exaggeration. It wholly lacks the judicial character of history. Dr Randall's style is perspicuous, but not graceful, it ministers more to the unburdening of the author's than to the delectation of the reader's mind, and sins not unfrequently against the canons of grammar and of rhetoric"—A P PEARSON, D.D. *N. Randolph, Jacob, M.D., 1796-1848, a native of Philadelphia, was elected a surgeon of the Penna. Hospital in 1835, and Prof. of Clinical Surgery in the Univ. of Penna., 1848. He was the author of some medical papers, and of a Memoir of his father-in-law, Philip Syng Physick, M.D., (q. v.), which has been pronounced "able, discriminating, and valuable." See Biographical Memoir of Dr. Randolph, by G. W. Norris, M.D., Phila., 1848, 8vo; H. B. Wallace's Literary Criticisms, &c., 1856, 56-60.

Randolph, John, D.D., 1749-1813, son of Thomas Randolph, D.D., Archdeacon of Oxford, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; Prof. of Poetry, 1776; Regius Prof. of Greek and Preb. of Salisbury, 1782; Canon of Christ Church, Regius Prof. of Divinity, and Rector of Ewome, 1783; Bishop of Oxford, 1799, trans. to Bangor, 1807, and to London, 1809. See Chalmers's Biog. Diet., xxvi. 33; Lon. Gent. Mag., lxxxiii., lxxxiv. He pub. many single sermons, charges, &c., and the following works: 1. De Græcæ Linguae Studio, Oxon., 1783, 4to, pp. 22. 2. Enchiridion Theologicum, or, A Manual for the Use of Students in Divinity, 1792, 5 vols. 12mo, 2d ed., 1812, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d and best ed., Clar. Press, 1825, 2 vols. 8vo. An excellent collection.

Contains: King Edward VIth's Catechism, Protestantism Ridley; Bp. Ridley's Treatise against Transubstantiation; Juellii Apologia; Novelli Catechismus, Bp. Taylor's Advice to his Clergy; Pearsoni Annus Paulini; Bp. Stillingfleet on Scripture Mysteries and the Doctrine of the Trinity and Transubstantiation compared; Bp. Gastrell on the Trinity; Bp. Conybeare on Miracles, Scripture Mysteries and Difficulties; Bp. Gibson's Pastoral Letters; Leslie's Short Method with the Deists, and Bentley's Remarks on Free-Thinking.

Referring to Bishop Watson's Collection of Theological Tracts, Camb., 1785, 6 vols. 8vo, Bickersteth remarks,

"The Enchiridion Theologicum of Bishop Randolph published in 1792 was of much superior character, and brought forward many valuable works of the Reformers"—Bickersteth's C. S., 4th ed., 1844, 302, n.

This compilation must not be confounded with Enchiridion Theologicum Anti-Romanum, 1836-37, 3 vols. 8vo, consisting of selections from Jeremy Taylor, Barrow, Wake, Patrick, Stillingfleet, Claggett, and others.

3. Sylloge Confessionum; editio altera et auctior, 1827, 8vo. 4. A Selection from a Course of Lectures delivered to Candidates for Holy Orders, comprising a Summary of the Whole System of Theology, Natural and Revealed, Lon., Oxf., and Camb., 1869, 8vo.

Randolph, John, 1778-1833, a native of Prince George county, Virginia, descended in the seventh degree from Pocahontas, educated at Princeton, Columbia, and William and Mary Colleges, was a member of the national House of Representatives from 1799 to 1829, with the exception of three intervals of two years each. Declining a re-election in 1829, he was soon afterwards chosen a member of the Convention for the revision of the Constitution of Virginia: was minister to Russia from August, 1830, to October, 1831; and died at Philadelphia when on the point of embarking for Europe for the benefit of his health. A number of his political speeches were pub. separately from time to time; a Selection from his Speeches will be found in his biography by Lemuel Sawyer, N. York, 1844, 8vo; and in 1834 appeared Letters of John Randolph to a Young Relative, Phila., 8vo, pp. 254. Notices of his personal peculiarities, and of his impassioned, eloquent, and ready, often sarcastic, wit, will be found in several of the authorities annexed: Hugh A. Garland's Life of J. Randolph, (see Garland, H. A.; South. Quar. Rev., xx. 41; J. Randolph, of Roanoke, &c., by F. W. Thomas, Phila., 1853, sm. 8vo; Party Leaders, by J. G. Baldwin, N. "The speech of Mr. Randolph [Non-Importation of British Merchandise, 1806] is certainly the production of a vigorous mind. It abounds in plain and striking statements, united with imagery by no means destitute of merit, though directed by an exceedingly coarse and vulgar taste"—LORD BROUGHAM Edin. Rev., Oct. 1807, 2

"I have read some of Randolph's speeches, but the effect must depend very much on the manner. There is a good deal of vulgar flattery. Malice there is, too, but that would be excusable, provided it were in good taste"—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1852, 447, n

"His speeches were awfully long, often occupying three days, but exceedingly effective, particularly when he was in the sarcastic vein. . . . Amongst other oddities, he took an unaccountable interest in English topography, and could have competed with Pennant himself in a minute acquaintance with our country-seats and villages, though we are not aware that he ever paid a visit of any duration to this country"—A. HAYWARD, Q. C. Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1840, 35, 36

Randolph, Peyton. Reports of Cases argued and determined in the Court of Appeals of Virginia, 1821-28, Richmond, 1823-32, 6 vols. 8vo.

Randolph, Sir Thomas, 1523-1590, a native of Kent, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, Principal of Broadgate Hall, 1549-53, and, under Elizabeth, ambassador to France, Russia, and Scotland. His account of his embassy in Russia, 1568, was pub. in Hakluyt's Voyages; two of his Letters were pub. by J. Oliphant in Buchanan's Letters, 1711, 8vo, (since inserted in the Edinburgh and Leyden edita. of Buchanan's Works); some of his Letters, Instructions, and Dispatches are in Strype's Annals, Goodall's Examination of the Letters said to be written by Mary Queen of Scots, Robertson's Hist. of Scotland, &c. See Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Biog.

Brit.; Lodge's Illustrations. Some of his unpublished letters, &c. are among the Cotton and Harleian MSS.

Randolph, Thomas, 1605-1684, a native of Badby, Northamptonshire, was educated at, and Fellow of, Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1631 was admitted to an ad eundem degree at Oxford. Removing to London, he soon became a favourite with Ben Jonson, who adopted him as his "son"-in-the-Muses, (see CARRWRIGHT, WILLIAM,) and introduced him to a set of boon companions, who soon drank him into an early grave. He died at the house of William Stafford, was buried with the ancestors of his host, honoured by a marble monument erected by Sir Christopher (afterwards Lord) Hatton, and celebrated by a Latin and English inscription from the pen of Dr. Peter Hausted, who—"all things to all men"—wrote plays for the profane, sermons for the serious, and epitaphs for the dead. 1. Aristippus, or the Jovial Philosopher; a Tragedy; with The Conceited Pedler, Lon., 1630, 4to; 1631, 4to; anon., 1635, 4to. 2. The Jealous Lovers; a Tragi-Comedy, 1632, 4to; 1634, 4to; 1640, 12mo; 1652, 12mo. 3. The Muses' Looking Glass; a Comedy, 1638, 4to; 1640, 8vo, 1652, 12mo; Oxf., 1668, 8vo; 1702, 8vo.

"As to this Play, it answers both the designs of Poetry, Profit, and Delight, and what a Student of Christ Church, Mr Rich West, said of it, will be found true by every Reader

Who looks within his clearer Glass will say,
At once he writ an Ethick Tract and Play."

Langbaine's Dram. Poets, 416.

"The [dramatic] piece of highest merit is the 'Muses' Looking-Glass,' which hardly can be called a drama, though written for the stage. It contains a great number of contrasted portraits of the extremes of the virtues and vices of morality, which are worked into a slender frame-work, like that of the Rehearsal and such pieces. It is from this that all our extracts will be taken, but they are such rich and striking pieces of portraiture that they well deserve the space allotted to them."—Lon. Retrospec. Rev., vi, 1822, 74

"His wit and humour are very conspicuous in the Puritan characters whom he supposes the spectators of his scenes in 'The Muses' Looking-Glass.' Throughout the rest of the drama (though it is, on the whole, his best performance) he unfortunately prescribed for himself too hard and confined a system of dramatic effect."—Cumpher's Specimens

4. Amyntas, or, The Impossible Dowry, 1638, 4to; 1652, 12mo

"It possesses as few of the charms of truth and reality as that of Tasso, and is much its inferior in graceful beauty."—Lon. Retrospec. Rev., vi, 74

5. Cornelianum Dolium Comœdia Cependissima, Auctore T. R., Londini, 1638, 12mo. Ascribed to this author. The Prodigal Scholar also has been ascribed to him. 6. A Pleasant Comedy; entitled Hey for Honesty, down with Knavery, trans. out of Aristophanes his Plutus, by Thomas Randolph, augmented and published by F. J., 1651, 4to. Sir C. Wren performed the part of Nemias. A vol of Randolph's Poems, Translations, and Plays was pub., Lon., 1634, 4to. This was succeeded by several edits of his Poems, with some of his dramatic pieces added, viz Oxf., 1638, 4to, 1640, sm. 8vo, Lon., 1643, sm. 8vo, 1652, sm. 8vo; 1664, sm. 8vo; 1668, sm. 8vo; J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1669, 108, £1 11s 6d. The last two edits., both called the 5th ed., and both containing the same pieces, (better than the preceding edits.,) are entitled Poems, with the Muses' Looking-Glass and Amyntas, whereunto is added the Jealous Lovers. Aristippus and The Conceited Pedler are also added. "He was accounted one of the most pregnant Wits of his Time, and was not only admired by the Wits of Cambridge, but likewise beloved and valued by the Poets and the Men of the Town in that Age"—Langbaine's Dram. Poets, 1691, 411

"Such was his genius like the quick eyes wink,
He could write sooner than another think.
His play was fancy's flame, a lightning wit,
So shot, that it could sooner pierce than hit"

OWEN FELTHAM on Randolph's Death

"Donne is superior to Randolph, and Sir W. Davenant a better poet than Donne."—Pope's Spence's Anec., Lect. IV. See, also, Lect. I.

The critic of the Retrospective Review (ut supra) is not insensible to the merits of Randolph's poetry, but honesty obliges him to qualify his commendation with the admission that "They are not only marked by a coarseness of language and plainness of expression but too common among his contemporaries, and likewise indulge in warm and highly coloured descriptions, and dwell upon themes of an indelicate nature."—vi. 63.

Randolph, Thomas, D.D., 1701-1788, a native of Canterbury, educated at, and (in 1723) Fellow of, Corpus Christi College, Oxford; Vicar of Perham and Waltham, Kent; Rector of Saltwood, 1746, and soon afterwards elected President of Corpus Christi College; Vice-Chancellor, 1756-59; Archdeacon of Oxford, 1767; Margaret Prof. of Divinity, 1768. He pub. eleven occasional sermons and pamphlets, 1733-77, and the following works: 1. The Christian's Faith a Rational Assent, in Answer to Christianity Not Founded on Argument, (see DODWELL, HENRY,) Lon., 1744, 8vo.

Lindsey*, 1775, 8vo. 5. The Prophecies and other Texts cited in the New Testament compared with the Hebrew Original and with the Septuagint Version, to which are added Notes, 1782, 4to.

"A very valuable tract"—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"This valuable and beautifully printed tract is now rarely to be met with, and only to be procured at seven or eight times its original price, [2s 6d] The most material of this excellent critic's observations are inserted in the notes to our chapter on the Quotations from the Old Testament in the New, in the former part of this volume"—Horne's Introd. to the C. S., &c. of the H. Scriptures, vol. ii

After Randolph's death appeared—6. A View of our Blessed Saviour's Ministry and the Proofs of his Divine Mission arising from thence, together with a Charge, Dissertations, Sermons, and Theological Lects., to which is prefixed an Account of his Life, 1764, 2 vols 8vo. He assisted J. Chelsum in his Remarks on Mr Gibbon's Roman History, and the historian's comments on his observations will be found in Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works, ed. 1837, 754, 755, 770, 772, 774.

Vols. i., ii., and iii. were reviewed by Henry Hallam in Edinburgh Review, April, 1805, 209-228. We quote a few lines from the conclusion:

"If we seem to have been too harsh and rigorous in our scrutiny, it should be remembered that no duty of an historian is so essential as fidelity, nor any so incumbent upon a critic as to investigate narrowly those portions which, as they are founded upon very remote and obscure authorities, few readers have the leisure or inclination to examine."—p. 228

Raspe, Rudolph Erich. The following article was prepared for us by a friend some years ago, since which time several editions of "Munchausen's Travels" have been published, especially one in quarto with ample and bold illustrations by Gustave Doré, which appeared in London about 1867, without date, but as published by Cassel, Petter & Galpin, Ludgate Hill. This brilliant edition, like its predecessors of all kinds, has no regular or sufficient account of the origin or the author of the fictions it contains, although in its preface, which is pleasant and well worth reading, the book itself is conjectured to be "a collection of curious incidents and adventures from various sources" made by "a German named Raspe." Still, the name of the so-called collector of the incidents of the work is given as somewhat doubtful, and he is regarded as deriving his materials generally from learned and rare books. In fact, his main purpose is supposed, as it had been frequently supposed before, to be that of ridiculing Bruce's Travels, whose truth was at one period often unjustly called in question, but which could not have been a matter in Raspe's mind when he was writing, since his little book was printed nearly six years before Bruce's five large volumes of travels had appeared. Of course, nearly every thing seems now as unsettled as ever about "Munchausen's Travels" and its author.

We propose, therefore, to give the principal facts concerning the life of a man who wrote one of the most popular and successful books that ever was published, as well as concerning his motives and resources for writing it; and to give them, too, as they were familiarly known to many eminent persons in Göttingen who had been much acquainted with the distinguished parties concerned, less than twenty-five years earlier than the time referred to, and who never ceased to be interested in their history and fate, or to talk about them, and especially about the strange adventures, the real learning and miserable crimes of Raspe himself, who wrote Munchausen's Travels for bread, when he was in want and disgrace.

"There have been many conjectures concerning the origin and the authorship of the stories in Baron Munchausen's Travels. Meusel, in his Lexikon, (vol. xi p. 62, 1811,) says that Rudolph Erich Raspe 'translated into English the well known Munchausen lies.' Southey, (Omniana, 1812, vol. i p. 165,) from coincidences between two of the tales and two in a Portuguese periodical published about 1730, thought that the English fictions must have come from the Portuguese, or that both must be traced to some common source older than either. The Encyclopædia Americana (art. Munchausen, 1832) says they were the work of Bürger, the poet, who published them in 1767 as if translated from the English, when they were, in fact, the Baron Friedrich von Munchausen's own stories, and that Bürger became involved in some difficulty in consequence. William West, in his 'Fifty Years' Recollections of an Old Bookseller,' (London, 1837, p. 18,) says that 'Bruce's Travels gave rise to "Gulliver revived, or the Travels of Baron Munchausen," written by St John of Oxford, in a vein of irony upon poor Bruce.' Döring, in his life of Bürger, (1847, p. 366,) speaks in the text of his biography as if Bürger were the author of the Munchausen tales, but doubts it in a note, without, however, suggesting who the author may have been. Sir Charles Lyell, in his 'Principles of Geology,' (Boston, 1853, p. 42,) while praising Raspe for his treatise De Insulis nuper inventis, records him in a note as the author of Baron Munchausen's Travels. Somebody in the Gentleman's Magazine (1866, vol. i p. 688) says they were the joint work of Raspe and Bürger. Again, Mrs Brewster, in her Letters from Cannes and Nice, (1867, p. 137,) exclaims, 'Baron Munchausen is here,' which she explains by adding that there was a person of that name at Nice, who said that 'one of his ancestors had a chaplain who was famous for drawing a long bow, and that his patron, the Baron of those days, wrote a book outwondering Herod, being a collection of marvellous adventures, for the purpose of shaming the priest, for which laudable design he was punished by having his own name held up to posterity as the story-teller par excellence.' And finally, in the last edition of Lowndes's 'Bibliographer's Manual,' 1861, after sundry pros and cons, we are told that the authorship 'has never been settled.'

"We suppose, however, that it can be settled. In each of the conjectures and suggestions made, by Meusel and Southey and so on down to the editor of Lowndes, there may be items and hints of the truth. Traces of the Munchausen tales may perhaps be found in the 'Deliosæ Academicæ,' published at Heilbronn, in 1666, under the title of 'Mendacia Ridicula,' from which the two Portuguese stories and the two corresponding stories in Munchausen may also have been taken. But it is not safe to decide on the origin of many wild fictions that are current in the world, and, among the rest, some that are found in Munchausen's Travels. For instance, the absurd story of the cherry-stone that was shot into a stag's head and grew to be a tree, is found, with slight variations about a wild boar, in the burlesque chronicle of Francesillo de Zufiga, the wise fool of Charles V., written about 1647, to amuse his master. But this light caricature, which might perhaps in other ways be deemed suggestive of such books as Munchausen, was never printed until 1866 (Rivadeneyra, Biblioteca, tom xxx). Still, some of the stories may have come from sources as obscure as the Deliosæ Academicæ or even Zufiga. But the origin of most of them is much nearer at hand, and the facts relating to the subject are as follows.

"There lived, in the latter half of the eighteenth century, at Bodenweder, in the Electorate of Hanover, a certain Baron Friedrich von Munchausen, who had been in the Russian service against the Turks, but who was then established on his own estates near the Weser, and much addicted to the chase, to good cheer, and to story-telling of the most extravagant sort. He was connected with the old family of which Baron Munchausen—who was minister to George II. for Hanover and induced that monarch to found the University of Göttingen—was the most eminent member, so that, from his respectable connexions, social qualities, and free hospitality, the Baron of Bodenweder was tolerated, if not respected, by the nobility and gentry of his neighborhood. He died in 1797.

"Among the persons who often visited him was Rudolph Erich Raspe, a man of learning, who was for some time connected with the library at Göttingen, and afterwards, in 1767, became a Professor in Cassel, and Keeper of a curious collection of antique gems and medals belonging to the Elector of Hesse. While in office there, this Raspe stole and sold gems and coins to the amount of about two thousand thalers, (nearly $1600), and then, at a moment when, with the permission of the Elector, he was on his way to Berlin for a visit, he sent back the keys of the cabinets that had been intrusted to him, and fled. On examination, the felony was at once discovered, and advertisements were issued for the offender's arrest, describing him as a person who lived and dressed extravagantly,—habits of foolish expense having led him to the crime he had committed. He was seized at Clausthal, in the Harz Mountains, but almost immediately escaped from the officers of justice, and made his way to England,—never again to put his foot upon the continent. This was in 1775.

"Before he left Germany, however, he had been well known as an author, and had been made a member of the Royal Philosophical Society of London, in the fifty-ninth volume of whose 'Transactions' there is a paper in Latin by him 'on the bones and teeth of elephants and other animals found in North America and various boreal regions of the world.' He had also published a treatise in Latin on the Cosmogony, in 1763, a play on the birthday of Queen Caroline of England, in 1764, and an edition of some of the inedited works of Leibnitz, in 1766. When he reached London, he therefore naturally looked to authorship for a support. He wrote on the subject of volcanoes in 1776, published in 1778 and 1777 a translation of the mineralogical travels of Forster in Italy and Hungary, in 1781 an Essay on the Origin of Oil Painting, [see Walpole's Letters, ed 1861, vol 314, 347, 473, 609, viii 38, n.] and in 1786 an account of some parts of James Tassie's [see TASSIE, JAMES] well-known collection of casts from ancient and modern gems [See, also, Watt's Bibl Brit., and Nichols's Lit. Anec., vii, (Index,) 343, 600.] But he was improvident and reckless. His bad character followed him from Germany. The Royal Society struck his name from the rolls of its members, and, in revenge, he threatened to publish a travestie of their Transactions, under the title of 'Unphilosophical Transactions of the Philosophers of England,' but it never appeared,—perhaps because the booksellers would not venture the experiment. He became at last very poor. He even sunk so low as to earn his bread in a German coffee-house in London, as one of its employes. While in this humble condition and a desperate man, he remembered the stories he had heard at the hospitable table of Baron Munchausen, and, thinking he could turn them to account, he published in 1785 a small pamphlet of his recollections of them, entitled 'Baron Munchausen's Narrative of his Marvellous Travels and Campaigns in Russia,'—exaggerated and caricatured, no doubt, but generally bearing a sufficient resemblance to the stories the baron had invented for the amusement of his bottle-companions, to permit their origin to be recognized. The venture succeeded. A new edition was called for the next year, and in less than a month after this second edition appeared, he published a third, with important additions, and with engravings to make it more attractive. This, for a time, gave him a new start in life, or seemed to do so; and, being still countenanced by Tassie, the eminent artist, who had extraordinary skill in making casts of ancient gems, he published in 1791 'A Descriptive Catalogue of a General Collection of Ancient and Modern Gems,' &c., in two volumes 4to, a learned and amusing book, on which he must have been long employed, and which is still valued and brings good prices.

"But his efforts were all in vain. His character had no proper foundation, and his habits were of the worst. Having a good knowledge of mineralogy, he obtained occasional employment from persons engaged in mining, and was at one time in Cornwall. But there, too, he failed. At last he went to Ireland, hoping to be more successful in the same way; but, after a short period of miserable suffering, he died at Macross, in the county of Kerry, where there are copper-mines, in the latter part of the year 1794, about fifty-eight years old.

"Soon after the appearance of Munchausen's Travels in England, the little book was naturally carried to Germany and became known in the kingdom of Hanover. Gottfried August Bürger, author of the famous ballad of 'Lenore,' was then living at Göttingen, almost as poor as Raspe, and quite as unprincipled. He, too, was a personal acquaintance of Munchausen's,—had enjoyed his riotous hospitality and had heard his wild stories. As a promising literary adventurer, he translated the little book of Raspe, and made additions to it from the stores of his own memory, so that it was published in 1787 and 1788 in two editions, or perhaps only with a changed title-page, at Göttingen, not very far from where Munchausen lived, and where his habits and stories were perfectly well known. But this was more than the fox-hunting baron could submit to. He therefore took legal proceedings against Bürger and against the bookselling house who were his publishers, and so thoroughly alarmed them that the imprint of 'London' instead of 'Göttingen' was put on the copies that had not been sold, and subsequently, as the matter was still further pressed, the remainder of the edition was destroyed, and the suit stopped by the full submission of the offending parties. The work itself seems to have been little noticed in the German journals of the time, but in the 'Allgemeine Deutsche Bibliothek,' to which Raspe is said earlier to have been a contributor, a review of the 'Travels' begins by saying, 'This is a collection of lies long ago told by Baron M., but probably invented, in part, by the anonymous author of this miserable book.'

"The 'miserable book,' however, has since gone its way over the world triumphantly, little regarding law or truth. It has been translated into many languages, printed and reprinted in all forms, altered and enlarged, and, although generally injured by the changes it has undergone, it has never been absolutely spoiled by any of them. It would be difficult to find a dozen books of amusement in modern times, that have been so attractive to all classes of society in all civilized countries; the peculiar delight of children, and yet not neglected by the mature and the cultivated, affording materials for the gayest frolics in the arts, and happy illustrations for the wit of orators, poets, and statesmen. Once, at least, it was swelled to four volumes. But it was a mistake to make it so large. In 1856 it was published in a thin quarto of only 22 pages, double columns, at Düsseldorf, with eight capital designs by A. von Witte, probably the most agreeable edition that has yet appeared. The last triumph, however, of Baron Munchausen that we have seen, is an announcement by Trübner, some time since, that he was printing a Russian translation of his wild fictions.

"On the other hand, Raspe has rarely enjoyed the honours, whatever they may be, to which he is entitled as their author. Indeed, in 1811 he was inquired after in the Gentleman's Magazine (vol lxxxi, ii, p 137) as a forgotten naturalist, and though a notice of him, written by Depping, the historian, is to be found in the 'Biographie Universelle,' it is evident that Depping knew nothing of Raspe's most successful achievement. Whatever, in fact, relates to his connection with Baron Munchausen and his stories as we have here given them—to his misery in London,—to Bürger's troubles in consequence of his translation,—to the lawsuit, &c.—was obtained above half a century ago from several of the professors and other men of learning in Göttingen who had known well Munchausen, Bürger, and Raspe, and who were familiar with all the circumstances relating to the origin and publication of 'Munchausen's Travels' in England and Germany.

"There is no end to the reprints of this famous book, in all languages, but especially in German and English, many of them with rude engravings, but the greater number relying wholly on the stories themselves, which, in truth, need no additions to make them attractive. The best, perhaps, and certainly the most curious, is the third English edition, which was the amplest issued by Raspe himself. It contains the two stories about the wild animal shot by a cherry-stone, and the sounds that were frozen up and thawed out, both of which, being in Southey's Portuguese review and in the 'Mendacia Ridicula,' are perhaps due to the learning of Raspe, and not to the reckless imagination of the real Munchausen. And the same may be said, with even less question, concerning the story about the balloon that carried off the London College of Physicians while they were dining sumptuously together at their anniversary, on the 30th of September, 1785, because Montgolfier had made his first experiment only three years before Raspe published this jest, and Raspe had not then seen the Baron for nearly a dozen weary and sad years. But the stories, with this and a few other exceptions, must have come from the dinner-table at Bodenweder, for they were too well recognized when they got back there.

"The first two editions that were published as inconsiderable pamphlets, seem to have disappeared. At least, Watt, Lowndes, and the other bibliographers who are careful in their notices of 'Munchausen's Travels,' begin with the third, which, from the unexpected success of the first and second, was evidently much enlarged as quickly as possible. A copy of it, now on our table, contains about a dozen engravings from designs which show that the humour of the stories had been comprehended by the artist. The title-page is as follows:

Gulliver Revived,
Or the singular
Travels, Campaigns, Voyages and Adventures of Baron Munikhouson commonly called Munchausen.

"The third edition considerably enlarged and ornamented with a number of views engraved from the original designs.

This third edition, luckily, reprints the prefatory notices to the two editions that preceded it, and they are curious because they not only tell us all that it was intended the public should know about the stories, but because they show that Kasse felt some compunctions about throwing overboard, as a liar outright, the hospitable old soldier who so wine he had so often enjoyed, although the way he takes to save him is not a little whimsical. The First Preface, which is without date, but was printed in 1786, runs thus:

"Baron Munkihousen, or Munchausen, of Bodenweder, near Hameln, on the Weser, belongs to the noble family of that name, which gave to the King's German dominions the late Prime Minister and several other public characters equally illustrious. He is a man of great original humour, and, having found that prejudiced minds cannot be reasoned into common sense, and that bold assertions are very apt to bully their audience out of it, he never argues with either of them, but adroitly turns the conversation upon indifferent topics, and then tells a story of his travels, campaigns, and adventures, in a manner peculiar to himself, and well calculated to shame the practice of lying, or, as it is politely called, drawing the long bow."

"As this method has been often attended with good success, we beg leave to lay some of his stories before the public, and request those who fall into the company of notorious bouncers to exercise the same upon every proper occasion, i.e., where people seriously advance the most notorious falsehoods under an appearance of truth, by which they injure themselves and deceive others."

"The second advertisement, dated 'London, April 20, 1786,' and speaking of the first as 'a little pamphlet,' holds the same tone about the Baron, declaring him to be 'a man of great honour,' and the third, which followed in less than a month, under date of 'May 18, 1786,' speaks of the additions to the volume as so important that 'it may fairly be considered a new work.' After all, however, in this form it is a very small book, but it has proved large enough to make its way to immortality."

Rastell, John, d. 1536, a learned London printer, educated at Oxford, married the sister of Sir Thomas More, and subsequently engaged in a controversy with John Frith, which resulted in his becoming a Protestant. Of how many of the books he printed he was editor, translator, or author, it would be difficult to decide: his name is principally known in connection with his Three Dialogues,—of which the New Boke of Purgatorie, 1530, fol., was answered by Frith,—his Apology against John Frith, The Church of John Rastell, and the following works: 1. Abbreviamētum Librorum Legum Anglorum, Lon., 1517, 4to. 2. Abbreviation of the Statutes, trans. by J. Ravenscroft, John Stark, D.D., 1772-1830, a native of Blandford, Prince George co., Virginia, was educated at William and Mary College; ordained Deacon and Priest in the Protestant Episcopal Church, 1817; Rector of St James's Church, Mecklenburg co., Virginia, 1817-32; Bishop of the diocese of North Carolina, 1823. He pub. a number of occasional sermons, charges, &c., and after his death these, with sixty-one sermons, selected by him, were repub. in his Works, containing his Sermons, Charges, and Controversial Tracts, to which is prefixed a Memoir of his Life, N. York, 1830, 2 vols. 8vo. The vols. were edited by Dr. (afterwards Bishop) J. M. Wainwright. See Sprague's Annals, vol. v., Episcopalian, 618, 617-625.

But Ravenscroft composed only a few, although perhaps he edited all, of the contents of the four volumes. 5. Psalms and Hymns, with the Music in Parts, 1621, 8vo., 1633, 8vo. Long regarded as the standard of psalmody. The vol. contains a melody for each psalm, many of them (St. David's, Canterbury, Bangor, &c.) by Ravenscroft himself. The arrangements of the bases and minor parts were contributed by John Milton, the father of the poet, Tallis, Morley, and nineteen other English musicians. Abraham Milner's Psalm-Singer's Companion professes to contain the greater and more valuable part of Ravenscroft's Book of Psalmody, and adds many new tunes, with words from Dr. Watts and others. Rawlinson, George, 1828-1857, educated at King's College and Emmanuel College, Cambridge; Curate of St. Mary's, Vincent-Square, 1854-56; Prof. of Applied Sciences at Elphinstone College, Bombay, from the autumn of 1856 until his death, at that place, in the September following. He pub. at Bombay, in 1857, a work on Dynamics. A second scientific class-book was in type, and four others were in active preparation, at the time of his decease. See Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1857, 678. His Elementary Statics, edited by Edw. Sturges, was pub., Camb. and Lon., 1861, or. 8vo.

Rawlinson, George, b. about 1815, entered Trinity College, Oxford, 1835, and was elected a Fellow of Exeter College, 1840; obtained the Denyer Prize for a Theological Essay in 1842, and again in 1843; was for some years a Tutor in his college, Moderator, 1852, and Public Examiner, 1852 and 1856; and Classical Examiner under the Council of Military Education. 1. Assisted by RAWLINSON, COL. SIR HENRY C., and WILKINSON, SIR J. G., The History of Herodotus; a New English Version, [from the text of T. Gaisford, D.D.]; with copious Notes and Appendices, illustrating the History and Geography of Herodotus, from the most recent Sources of Information, and embodying the Chief Results, Historical and Ethnographical, which have been obtained in the Progress of Cuneiform and Hieroglyphical Discovery, Lon., 4 vols. 8vo: i., ii., iii., 1858; iv., 1860; N. York, vols. i., ii., 1859; iii., 1860; iv., 1860; 2d ed., Lon., 1862, 4 vols. 8vo. This great work was announced as early as 1851, but students have greatly profited by the wise delay. See Prefaces to the volumes.

"In our opinion, a better English translation of the text of Herodotus than the present one cannot reasonably be desired; and, despite the rapid progress and unanticipated revelations of modern discovery, a very long period probably will elapse before a translation of the author, more ably and valuably illustrated, will be possible."—Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1858, 400 notice of vol. I.

"The most important contribution to our knowledge of the past history of the world that the present century (so fertile in discovery) has afforded"—Lon. Lit. Gaz. notice of vol. I.

"This volume fulfils entirely the high expectations with which its appearance has been awaited"—A. P. Peabody, D.D. N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1859, 572 notice of vol. I.

"The translation is executed with great spirit and freedom. It is by far the best we have met with"—Lon. Press, Feb. 20, 1858. notice of vol. I.

See Lon. Athen., Feb. 27, 1858, (comments on Herodotus from Blackw. Mag., Dec. 1855, N. Brit. Rev., Nov. 1857.)

"On the life of Herodotus and the historical notes and essays Mr Rawlinson has bestowed much loving care and diligence. there is scarcely an ancient or modern writer whom he does not seem familiar with, and what light recent Oriental discovery serves to throw on the topics of the history, the editor avails himself of amply, having secured such distinguished associates and referees as Sir Henry Rawlinson and Sir Gardner Wilkinson. The result is, as far as life and notes and appendices go, the completest English edition of Herodotus yet published."

One book only of Herodotus is translated in this volume, 300 pages of appendices occupying more than half the remainder, and forming the most valuable portion of the work. The work throughout is enriched by excellent maps and illustrations. We have compared the present version with the versions of Littlebury [vide p. 1106, supra] and Beloe, [vide p. 162, supra], and, though in general more accurate, Mr Rawlinson's rendering is less grateful to the ear than either, and infinitely below the nerve and pathos of the first translator."—Lon. Athen., April 10, 1858, 464 notice of vol. I.

"This second volume of Herodotus is, in its form and general arrangement, no less than in the interest of its contents, a great improvement upon the first. . . The philological and ethnological portion of the work opens out much that is no less new than attractive, and its illustration of the early Biblical period this volume is peculiarly full and suggestive. The fruit of a remarkable experience abundantly appears in the work before us, which Sir Gardner Wilkinson has annotated in the observant spirit, though without the undiscerning belief, of the ancient historian"—Ibid., June 19, 1858 notice of vol. II.

"This third volume of the English translation of Herodotus is in no way inferior to its predecessors in erudition, in geographical or philological interest, in the completeness of the notes and the value of the appendices."—Ibid., Dec. 18, 1858. notice of vol. III.

Ray, James. Complete Hist. of the Rebellion in 1745, York, 1749; Bristol., 1750, 8vo; other eds.

Ray, or Wray, John, Nov. 29, 1627-Jan. 17, 1704-5, a native of Black-Notley, near Braintree, Essex, where his father was a blacksmith, after pursuing his studies for some time at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, removed to Trinity College, and there, in company with Isaac Barrow, attained the honour of a minor Fellowship in 1649, being chosen major Fellow when he had completed his Master's degree. In 1651 he was made Greek Lecturer of the College; in 1653, Mathematical Lecturer; in 1655, Humanity Reader; in 1660 was ordained deacon and priest, but never had a parochial cure, and in 1662 resigned his Fellowship rather than sign the Act of Uniformity, which required a subscription against the Solemn League and Covenant; from 1663 to 1666 accompanied his friend and former pupil, Francis Willughby, on a scientific expedition on the continent, the former attending to botany and the latter to zoology, in 1667 became a Fellow of the Royal Society, the Transactions of which he enriched by the results of some of his observations, in 1672 lost his friend Willughby, who bequeathed him the guardianship of his sons and £80 per annum. His latter years were spent in his native place, Black-Notley, where he resided in a house of his own building. He died in the communion of the Church of England, to which he was much attached. This learned and excellent natural philosopher was the first to lay down correct principles of classification in the vegetable and animal kingdoms and his works have been freely drawn from by later naturalists, both at home and abroad, as we shall see below. 1. Willughby through Spain, &c., 1673, 8vo; 2d ed., 1739, 2 vols. 8vo. Ray's Travels are reprinted in Harris's Collec. of Voy. and Trav., vol. ii.

"Valuable for its botanical researches"—STEVENSON
"Ray gives a brief yet ingenious description of every thing he saw, and curiously lays before us any thing that is rare, but in his account of mineral waters and of foreign plants, as one so understanding in these particulars, he outdoes any thing that could be expected from other travellers"—JOHN LOCKE, the Philosopher.

The student of natural history must not neglect the following sources of information respecting this eminent man and his works. Derham's Life of Ray, (ut supra); the biographical notices of him in Biog. Univ., by Cuvier and Du-Petit-Thomas; in Rees's Cyc., by Sir J. E. Smith; Pulteney's Sketches, Haller's Bibl. Bot.; Biog. Brit.; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, Memorials of Ray, by E. Lankester, M.D., Ray Soc. Pub., vol. ii. of 1st year, 1844, 8vo; Correspondence of Ray, edited by E. Lankester, M.D., Ray Soc. Pub., vol. ii. of 5th year, 1848, 8vo; WILKINS, JOHN, D.D., No. 5.

We have referred to the Ray Society. This title is perhaps a greater honour to the naturalist than that of the genus of plants known as the Raiana, (Plumier.) The Ray Society was established in 1844, for the purpose of giving to the world "new and carefully edited editions of rare books of established merit, unique MSS., and translations of works on Zoology and Botany, illustrated with fine engravings from the most recent discoveries." From 1844 to 1856, 28 vols. (18 8vo and 10 fol.) were issued. Sets are very rare, but occasionally can be bought at about twelve guineas. See Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug 1851, 176; Athen., 1845, 704, 989.

Linnaeus and Buffon are largely indebted to the works of Ray, and Cuvier traces the principal facts noted in Daubenton and Hally's Dictionnaire d'Ichthyologie (in Encyc. Méthodique) to Ray's treatises on fishes. Respecting his zoological works, it is the remark of the eminent authority just quoted,

"They may be considered as the foundation of modern zoology, for naturalists are obliged to consult them every instant, for the purpose of clearing up the difficulties which they meet with in the works of Linnaeus and his copyists. . . . The particular distinction of his labours consists in an arrangement more clear, more determinate, than those of any of his predecessors, and applied with more consistency and precision. His distribution of the classes of quadrupeds and birds has been followed by the English naturalists almost to our own days; and we find many vestiges of that he has adopted as to the latter class in Linnaeus, in Brisson, in Buffon, and in all other ornithologists. . . . The first true systematist of the animal kingdom."—Cuvier's Biog. Univ.

"Ray," remarks a late English writer, who cites the testimony just quoted, "was the first zoologist who made use of comparative anatomy; he inserts at length every account of dissections that he could find, several had been made at Paris. He does not appear to be very anxious about describing every species; thus, in the Simian family he omits several well known. [Note.] 'Hoc genus animalium tum caudatorum tum cauda carentium species valde numerosae sunt, non tamen malis apud autores fide dignos descriptis occurrunt.' He only describes those species he has found in Clusius or Marcgrave, and what he calls Parisienses, such, I presume, as he had found in the Memoirs of the Académie des Sciences. But he does not mention the Simia Inuus, or the S. Hamadryas, and several others of the most known species."—HALLAM. Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii. 583-584.

It will be seen (WILLUGHBY, FRANCIS, infra) that Swainson considers that Willughby is justly entitled to much of the praise which has been lavished on Ray as the founder of systematic zoology.

As a botanist, the merits of Ray have been thus succinctly enumerated:

"In the botanical works of Ray we find the natural families of plants better defined, the difference of complete and incomplete flowers more precise, and the grand division of monocotyledons and dicotyledons fully established. He gave much precision to the characteristics of many classes, and introduced several technical terms, very useful for the perspicuity of botanical language, finally, he established many general principles of arrangement which have since been adopted. Ray's method of classification was principally by the fruit, though he admits its imperfections. 'In fact, his method,' says Pulteney, 'though he assumes the fruit as the foundation, is an elaborate attempt, for that time, to fix natural classes.'"—HALLAM ubi sup., iii. 588.

"The greatest botanist in the memory of man"—HALLER. Bibl. Bot.

"The most accurate in observation, the most philosophical in contemplation, and the most faithful in description, amongst all the botanists of our own, or perhaps any other, time"—SIR JAMES EDWARD SMITH. Rees's Cyc.

As a writer, Ray is justly entitled to very high praise:

"Our countryman, the excellent Mr. Ray, is the only describer that conveys some precise idea in every term or word, maintaining his superiority over his followers and imitators, in spite of the advantage of fresh discoveries and modern information."—REV. GILBERT WHITE. Natural Hist. of Selborne, Letter XIV.

It is gratifying to be able to add that his character as a man admirably supported his high rank as a scholar and an author.

"His varied and useful labours have justly caused him to be regarded as the Father of Natural History in this country, and his character is, in every respect, such as we should wish to belong to the individual enjoying that high distinction. His claims to the regard of posterity are not more founded on his intellectual capacity than on his moral excellence."—Memoir of Ray, in Naturalist's Library, Entomology, vol. vii. 60.

"He found the highest wisdom to consist in the cordial reception of the revealed will of God, and in unfeigned subjection to it."—ORME. Bibl. Bib., 368.

In scientific knowledge he was far in advance of his age, but his contemporaries knew and valued his abilities and acquirements.

"The best Botanist and the most accomplished Naturalist of this or perhaps any age. . . . Of vast Memory, exact Judgment, universal Knowledge, and extraordinary Talents."—Philosophical Letters of Ray, ed. 1718, 8vo, pp. 151, 153, 154.

"Ray, who first supplied materials for the argument for natural religion, drawn from final causes."—FARRAR. Crit. Hist. of Free Thought, 1863, Lect. VIII., Note 49.

We cannot better conclude this, the latest sketch of Ray's life and labours, than with the words of his friend and first biographer

"In his dealings, no man more strictly just; in his conversation, no man more humble, courteous, and affable, toward his God, no man more devout, and towards the poor and distressed, no man more compassionate and charitable according to his abilities."—DR. Read, Thomas Buchanan, b. March 12, 1822, in Chester, Pennsylvania, removed to the city of Cincinnati at the age of fourteen, and became a pupil of Cleveland the sculptor. On the departure of this eminent artist to Europe, Read turned his attention to painting, in which art he soon acquired reputation. In 1840 he removed to Boston, where he married and resided for five years, varying devotion to his easel by the composition of poetry, (published in the Boston Courier, Graham's Magazine, and other periodicals,) some of which elicited the commendation of Mr. Longfellow. Thus encouraged, he gave to the world a number of volumes, which we shall presently notice in the order of their publication. In 1846 he removed to Philadelphia; passed a year in Florence, 1850-51; again visited Italy in 1853 and subsequent years; and since his late return to America has resided chiefly at Philadelphia and Cincinnati, practising his favourite profession with reputation and success.

The critic of the North British Review for August, 1852, (Coventry Patmore,) declared that "Tennyson himself" had "scarcely surpassed in its way the first thirteen stanzas of The Closing Scene." Other poems in the volume pleased Mr. Patmore less.

"It is pleasant to turn to a volume of poetry like Mr. Read's."—Lon. Chris. Remembr.

"The poems of Thomas Buchanan Read have the ring of sterling metal, and bear the superscription of genius. It seems to us that he has much of the lyrical purity of Longfellow and the objective delineation of Bryant. If blossoms indicate fruit, if mind can stamp its individuality in printed words, America may point to another poet in her fast-filling list."—Lon. Critic, 1852, 383.

The Westminster Review (Oct. 1856) is less enthusiastic in its commendations than some of the periodicals just cited, and other critics found so much fault with the author that in 1859 he gave a paper to the public on the subject, which it is supposed will be followed by a new edition of the work, "supported by proofs of its prison revelations." In 1862 Mr. Reade obtained a judicial verdict against Mr. Conquest, of the Grecian Theatre, for eighty nights' performance of a dramatic version of this work. He has since dramatized it himself. Griffith Gaunt was originally published in The Argosy, and in The Atlantic Monthly, Dec. 1865 et seq. Reviewed in Atlantic Monthly, Dec. 1866. It was consured for indecency and immorality by The Round Table. Mr. Reade responded in a Letter to the Editor of the New York Times, (see Round Table, Oct. 13, 1866, 168, 176,) in which he threatened to drag the editor "and his slanders before a jury of his countrymen." He was as good as his word; and in March, 1869, the "jury of his countrymen" "dragged" six cents damages out of the editor's pocket. Griffith Gaunt was dramatized, in five acts, by Augustine Daly, of New York, and successfully represented at the New York Theatre, in Nov. 1866. 15. With BOUQUAULT, DION, Foul Play, Lon., 1868, 3 vols. p. 8vo; Bost., 1868, 8vo. Dramatized with great success. A drama by Reade, founded on Tennyson's poem of Dora, was successfully produced, June 1, 1867, at the Adelphi Theatre, London. A review of Reade's writings, by Miss H. E. Prescott, (supra), appeared in The Atlantic Monthly, Aug. 1864. See, also, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1865, 276. "Seldom has a writer made appeal to the public for poetic honours with the pertinacity and constant ill-success of Mr. John Edmund Reade. . . In the mechanism of his art—as the above extract shows—Mr. Reade is sufficiently capable. To take him from his books, he has a cultured mind, a gentle heart, a trained intellect, right feelings with such a combination of gifts, one who has lived long enough to publish four editions should bear with equanimity to be told that he is not a poet"—*Westm. Sherburne says that he published Cosmographia Isagogica, and wrote a book entitled De Arte Faciendi Horologium, and another De Usa Globorum et de Statu Temporum. He collated the 1st and 3d edts. of Fabian's Chronicle, trans. Euclid, undertook the ancient description of England, (these all appear to have been unpublished), and wrote two other works, (see his own list at the end of No. 5, supra), of which no trace, either in print or MS., has been discovered.—The Gate of Knowledge, and The Treasure of Knowledge. We are also told that he wrote of Auricular Confession and De Negotio Eucharistie. Mr. Redding has published other books, and some pamphlets; edited, or written from notes, The Travels of Captain Andrews in South America, and Pandurang Hari, (an Eastern Story); edited many other books; established several periodicals, and contributed largely to magazines, &c.; is credited with a Memoir of Beckford of Fonthill, has put forth translations from the German and French, and has privately printed a Naval Gazetteer. See, also, GOSNOLD, JOHN, No. 3. In 1863 he was awarded a pension of £70 per annum "in consideration of his labours in the field of political and other literature, extending over more than half a century." He has lived long enough to enjoy the triumph of those liberal principles for which he so long battled as one of a small minority. We trust that (though now over fourscore) he will be allowed to survive the publication of his History of the Last Two Wars between England and America: may "the child" ever be "unborn" who is to record the history of a third contest!

Rev., lxxiii. 491; II. T. Arnold's Lects. on Modern History, N. York, 1845, 12mo, III. Alex. Reid's Dictionary of the English Language, 1845, 12mo; IV. G. F. Graham's English Synonyms, 1847, 12mo; V. Lord Mahon's History of England, vols. i.-iv., (1717-63,) 1849, 2 vols. 8vo see MAHON, PHILIP HENRY, LORD, No. 3, p. 1203, supra; VI. Gray's Poetical Works, Phila., 1850, 12mo; see GRAY, THOMAS, p. 726, supra; VII. C. Wordsworth's Memoirs of Wm. Wordsworth, Bost., 1851, 2 vols. 16mo see WORDSWORTH, CHRISTOPHER, No. 22; N. Amer. Rev., lxxiii. 473, 494; Kent's Course of Eng. Read., ed. 1853, 51. He also pub. an Oration on a True Education, delivered before the Zetosophic Society of the Univ. of Penna., May, 1848, Phila., 1848, 8vo; an Address before the Art Union of Philadelphia, May 7, 1849, 1849, 8vo; a life of his grandfather, General Joseph Reed, in Sparks's American Biography, Series Second, viii. 209-439, and contributed to the York Review, the New York Literary World, and other periodicals. After his death appeared the following volumes, edited by his brother, William B. Reed, (infra;) 1. Lects. on English Literature, [from Chaucer to Tennyson,] delivered in the Chapel Hall of the University of Pennsylvania, Phila., 12mo, 1855; 5th ed., 1857; Lon., 1855, or. 8vo, (Shaw's Exeelsior Lib., ii.) 10th 1000, 1866. Also printed in larger type. See No. 3.

"The productions of a refined and gentle mind."—Lon. Athen., 1855, 568.

"In every way a most creditable contribution to the Library of critical literature"—Lon. Leader.

"The author displays a ripe scholarship"—Lon. Guardian.

"A volume of rich and instructive interest"—Lon. Freeman.

"The English is classical, the style is clear, the criticisms are acute. . . . The editor has done his part well. . . . On the whole, the book is well put together, and the prefatory notice is brief, judicious, and in good taste."—Lon. Economist, in Littell's Liv. Age, xlii. 559-561.

"A book full of beauty, taste, and learning"—N. Amer. Rev., lxxxi. 252-257.

2. Lects. on English History as illustrated by Shakespeare's Chronicle Plays, and on Tragic Poetry, Phila., 12mo, 1855; 4th ed., 1857; Lon., 1856, or. 8vo, (Shaw's Exeelsior Lib., iv.) 5th 1000, 1860. Also printed in larger type. See No. 3.

"They evidence a cultivated and reflective mind, and contain much pleasant comment on the universal—the 'myriad-minded'—Bard."—Athen., 1856, 585.

"The author's aversion to Hume is only equalled by his admiration of Wordsworth; and both are excessive."—N. York Criterion, Jan. 8, 1856, 150.

See, also, Putnam's Mag., Jan. 1856, 106.

3. Lects. on the British Poets. [from the earliest accounts to the present day.] Phila., 2 vols. 12mo, 1857; Lon., 1857, or. 8vo, (Shaw's Excelsior Lib., v.); last ed., 1860.

"The great success of the two volumes [Nos 1 and 2, supra] . . . has induced me to publish another series still more complete"—Win. B. Reed's Preface.

The "great success" of Mr. Reed's lectures is best proved by the figures. These show a sale, calculated to about Jan. 1, 1860, as follows:

In the United States, of Nos. 1, 2, and 3, in all,	12,425 vols.
In London, No. 1, 7000 copies.
" " 2, 4000 "
" " 3, 3000 "	14,000 "

Total sale, 26,425 vols.

We quote opinions on No. 3 from two high authorities:

"It will, we hope, have an extensive circulation. It is the kind of book we should like to see given as a prize to the best readers in national schools, and placed within the reach of all boys big enough to understand the author's meaning."—Lon. Gent Mag., 1857, ii 188

"Prof. Reed is as ready to award praise as he is fearless in expressing censure. In short, as a critic, he is obedient to the canon of Favart, who says, 'le flambeau de la critique doit éclairer et non brûler.'"—Athen., 1857, ii 1023-1030

See, also, Lon. Reader, 1856, i. 247; N. York Round Table, 1856, i. 147.

4. Two Lects. on the History of the American Union, [delivered in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington,] Phila., 1856, 12mo, pp. 68.

"No one can glance through the Lectures, which are oratorical in style, without acknowledging the noble ardour which inspires them, or without sympathizing in the American's appeal—almost as fervent as a prayer—in behalf of the Republic he loved, and to the service of which he devoted his generous and honourable life."—Lon. Athen., 1856, 1402

"A generous and honourable life."—the words are fitly and truly spoken. We also

-knew him but to love him,
And named him but to praise!"

Reed, Isaac, 1742-1807, a native of London, after some experience at the bar, devoted himself to literary pursuits and the collection and enjoyment of a large library of rare books,—the sale of which after his death occupied thirty-nine days and produced more than £4000. He edited The Poetical Works of Lady M. W. Montagu, 1768. The Cambridge Seasonian Prize Poems, 1773, The Repository, 1773-83, 4 vols. 8vo; again, 1790, 4 vols. 12mo, Middleton's Witch, 1778. 2d ed. of Dodsley's Old Plays, 1780, 12 vols. 8vo; Biog. Dramatica, 1782, 2 vols. 8vo, Shakespeare's Plays, 1785, 10 vols. 8vo, again, with G. Stevens, 1793, 10 vols. 8vo, again, with Reed's name, (being 5th ed. of Johnson and Stevens's Shakespeare), 1803, 10 vols. 8vo. See Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 805-6, Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 2261, Southey's Life, ch. x. He wrote the Biographical Notes to Pearce's Collec. of Poems, 1775, 4 vols.; Life of Dr. Dodd, 1777; Biographical Notes to a new ed. of Dodsley's Collec., 1782, 6 vols.; Life of O. Goldsmith, prefixed to vol. ii. of his Essays, 1795, 3 vols. 12mo; a Life of Dr. Farmer, in Seward's Biographiana, and many biographical and other articles in Westminster Mag. (of which he was probably editor), 1773-80, in European Mag., (of which he was editor), 1780-82, and Gent. Mag. He also contributed largely to Johnson's English Poets, and to various publications put forth by John Nichols and other persons. The later edits. were pub. in the same vol. with Horace Walpole's Castle of Otranto, of which The Old English Baron is, to some extent, a professed imitation.

"Have you seen 'The Old Baron,' a Gothic story, professedly written in imitation of Otranto, but reduced to reason and probability? It is so probable that any trial for murder at the Old Bailey would make a more interesting story Mrs Barbauld's 'Fragments' was excellent. This is a caput mortuum."—Horace Walpole to Rev Wm Mason, April 8, 1778 Letters, ed 1861, vii. 51. See, also, 111, 319

"In no part of The Old English Baron, or of any other of her works, does Miss Reeve show the possession of a rich or powerful imagination. Her dialogue is sensible, easy, and agreeable, but neither marked by high flights of fancy nor strong bursts of passion. Her apparition is an ordinary fiction, of which popular superstition used to furnish a thousand instances, when nights were long and a family assembled round a Christmas log had little better to do than to listen to such tales. The Old English Baron has always produced as strong an effect as any story of the kind, although liable to the objections which we have freely stated, without meaning to impeach the talents of the amiable authoress."—SIR WALTER SCOTT's Biographical Notices of Eminent Novelists Clara Reeve.

"The 'Recess' [by Sophia Lee] and the 'Old English Baron' are also [with The Castle of Otranto] 'dismal treatises,' but with little in them 'at which our fell of hair is like to rouse and stir as life were in it.' They are dull and prosing, without the spirit of fiction or the air of tradition to make them interesting."—Harsh's Lects on the English Novelists.

"That the 'Old English Baron' was only seventy years ago esteemed by critics an excellent work of fiction, and became very popular, are facts that most forcibly declare the advance made during the last two generations in education and general intelligence."—Jacqueson's Novels and Novelists, 1858, i. 274

New ed., by W. Finlason, 1869, 3 vols. 8vo, £2 2s. Reeves incorporates int. his work "the whole of Glanville; and what seemed to be the most interesting part of Bracton."

"It affords a clear and accurate view of the rise and progress of the laws of England. . . . It will require some little time and attention to become reconciled to the dry detail by which this important work is characterised; but it must be done by one who aspires to a superior knowledge of the foundations of our system of jurisprudence"—Warren's Law Stu., ed. 1846, 206.

"You'll find Reeves's History of the English Law of infinite service to you I should read it in the evenings. It is full of interest in every point of view. I read every word of it, very

"The best account that we have of the progress of the law from the time of the Saxons to the reign of Elizabeth. It covers the whole ground of the law included in the old abridgments, and it is a work deserving the highest commendation. I am at a loss which most to admire, the full and accurate learning which it contains, or the neat, perspicuous, and sometimes elegant style in which that learning is conveyed."—1 Kent, Com., 560, n, 8th ed., 1854.

"A work, especially in the latter volumes, of great research and judgment, a continuation of which, in the same spirit and with the same qualities, would be a valuable accession not only to the lawyer's but philosopher's library."—Hallam's Constitu. Hist. of England, 7th ed., 1854, i. 18, n.

"The most judicious mode of reading this work is to take it up at intervals, and to impress faithfully on the mind the law as it existed at a particular period, before proceeding with it in all its variety of changes."—Hoffman's Leg. Sci., 163, 2d ed., 1836.

Reid, Captain Mayne, b. 1818, in the North of Ireland, where his father was a Presbyterian minister, was allured from the theological studies which were preparing him for the pulpit, by the thirst for adventure and the desire for foreign travel. In 1838 he visited the city of New Orleans, and from thence made several hunting and trading excursions among the Indians of the Red River country and those of Missouri, gaining that knowledge of scenery, manners, and characteristics which he has since used to such advantage in his Scalp-Hunters, White Chief, and some others of his romances. More than five years were spent on the prairies and in rapid tours of observation in almost all of the Western, Southern, and Northern States. Subsequently settling in Philadelphia, he contributed largely to the periodicals of that city and those of New York. On the breaking out of the Mexican war, in 1845, he obtained a commission in the army of the United States, and served with distinction "throughout the campaign." In 1849 he sailed from New York, at the head of a body of volunteers, for the purpose of aiding the Hungarians in their struggle for freedom. At Paris the party was arrested by the unwelcome intelligence of the defeat of the Hungarian army of the South, August 9, and the extinction of all hope by the surrender of Gorgei at Arad, August 14. Captain Reid now settled in London, and produced with great rapidity a series of novels and juvenile works which have made him a favourite author with all ages. The artistic adjuncts which illustrate the text of his volumes have doubtless contributed to the triumphs of the author's graphic pen. A new edition of his Works, in 15 vols. 12mo, was published by G. W. Carleton, N. York, 1868. A new daily paper, entitled The Little Times, is announced (1867) to appear in London, with Captain Mayne Reid as editor.

In Jan. 1869, New York, 8vo, Captain Reid established a monthly magazine. He has contributed to periodicals.

"Des ses premiers ouvrages M. Mayne Reid s'est acquis une grande réputation de conteur, justifiée surtout par la nouveauté, l'originalité hardie, et l'exactitude de ses récits, les mœurs étranges des pionniers de l'Ouest, la vie guerrière des tribus indiennes, les tableaux pittoresques, les aventures, les chasses, les voyages, sont le fond naturellement intéressant des romans de l'écrivain soldat, qui le met en œuvre sans prétention, dans un style incorrect parfois, mais souvent plein de véhémence et d'images."—Dict. univ. des Contemp., par G. Chambers's Journal, Eliza Cook's Journal, the Non-conformist, The Standard, and other respectable authorities (vide supra) unite in the acknowledgment of Captain Reid's merits as a writer for boys.

"Now-a-days, in place of lecturers, the world of little folks has its race of story-tellers who are 'boys with the boys' and are none the less efficient for being cheerful. Among these the Captain is at the head of the company and right worthily does he perform his office."—Athen., 1857, 15.

Reid, Thomas, brother of Alexander Reid, physician to Charles I., (supra) and of the same family as the succeeding, was Greek and Latin Secretary to James I. He collected in a volume the Theores he had defended at foreign universities, and some of his Latin poems were inserted in the Delicis Poetarum Scotorum. See, also, Young, Patrick. Dempster speaks of him as a man of great distinction. A brother of Thomas Reid translated George Buchanan's History of Scotland into English.

Reid, Thomas, D.D., April 26, 1710–Oct. 7, 1796, a native of Strachan, Kincairdineshire, Scotland, of the same family as the preceding, and the son of the Rev. Lewis Reid, at the age of twelve or thirteen became a student of Marischal College, Aberdeen, and was subsequently appointed to the librarianship, a post which he resigned in 1736. In 1737 he was presented by King's College, Aberdeen, to the living of New Machar, Aberdeenshire, where his amiable temper and faithful labours soon overcame the opposition of his people to an appointment which the law of patronage made repugnant to their feelings. At this time he had so little confidence in his powers of composition that he was in the habit of edifying his hearers with the sermons of Archbishop Tillotson and Dr. Evans.

In 1740 his loneliness was relieved by his marriage to Elizabeth, the daughter of his uncle, Dr. George Reid, a London physician, and about the same time he was led to an anxious investigation of those great problems in mental and moral philosophy which had become almost hopelessly obscured by the unhappy speculations of sophists who had too long been permitted to "darken counsel by words without knowledge."

His first publication, inserted in the Philosophical Transactions in 1748, and since frequently printed with other works of his, was an Essay on Quantity, occasioned by reading a Treatise in which Simple and Compound Ratios are applied to Virtue and Vice. In this paper he combats the application of mathematics to morals, contended for by Francis Hutcheson in his Inquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of Beauty and Virtue.

In 1752 he was elected Professor of Moral Philosophy in King's College, Aberdeen, in 1763 pub. his Inquiry into the Human Mind, on the Principles of Common Sense, (London, 8vo,) and in the same year was called to the chair of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, vacated by the resignation of Adam Smith. This important office he filled with great reputation until his seventy-first year, retiring in 1781 to the undisturbed enjoyment of the society of his books, the domestic circle, and his literary friends.

In 1773 he pub., as an Appendix to the third vol. of Lord Kames's Sketches of the History of Man, An Analysis of Aristotle's Logic, (since frequently reprinted with other works of Reid's,) contributed to the Philosophical Society of Glasgow An Examination of Priestley's Opinions concerning Matter and Mind, Observations on the Utopia of Sir Thomas More, Physiological Reflections on Muscular Motion, and other papers, pub. in 1785, Edinburgh, 4to, Essays on the Intellectual Powers of Man; and in 1788, 4to, Essays on the Active Powers of Man. The last two were republished together, Dublin, 1790, 3 vols. 8vo. After his retirement, he was greatly affected by the loss of his wife, after a union of fifty-two years. In the summer of 1796 he spent a few weeks at Edinburgh, in the company of his friend, former pupil, biographer, and most distinguished scholar, Dugald Stewart; on his return to Glasgow, in September, he was prostrated by sickness, and died on the 7th of October following, after repeated strokes of palsy.

His personal character was well calculated to gain the respect and affection of his acquaintances.

"Its most prominent features were intrepid and inflexible rectitude, a pure and devoted attachment to truth, and an entire command (acquired by the unwearying exertions of a long life) over all his passions."—DUGALD STEWART, Memoir of Reid, Edin., 1803, 8vo, prefixed to the collective edit. of Reid's Works, Edin., 1803, 4 vols. 8vo, (N. York, 1822, 3 vols. 8vo,) and to Hamilton's Reid, (infra). See STEWART, DUGALD, Nos. 4, 5.

This edit. was reviewed by Lord Jeffrey (not by Dr. John Brown) in Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1804, 269–287; partially reprinted in Jeffrey's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., Lon., 1853, 623–630 (see also 641, 642).

Stewart's Memoir, (see also his Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 66, n. 167, n. 218–220,) which was last pub. in Sir Wm Hamilton's collective ed. of Stewart's Works, vol. x., 1858, has been commended in the highest terms:

"The life of Dr Reid by his disciple and friend, Mr Dugald Stewart, the great ornament of his master's school, is known to all the world as one of the finest specimens of philosophical biography that any language can furnish."—Life of Reid, in Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., xix. 107.

"The name and writings of Dr Reid are celebrated throughout Europe, and it would be impertinent to attempt any addition to what has been said of him in the account of his life, which is a model for the biography of a philosopher."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Life, chap. i.

Reid's Inquiry into the Human Mind has frequently been published separately. Lon., 1763, 8vo; 1769, 8vo; 4th ed., 1785, 8vo, 5th ed., Edin., 1801, 8vo, 6th ed., i., Glasg., 1804, 8vo, 1817, 8vo, Edin., 1818, 8vo, 1819, 8vo; 1821, 8vo, Lon., 1853, 8vo, and, with other works of the author, it has already claimed our notice on a preceding page. See PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, LL.D., No. 15, and authorities there cited.

"Dr Reid's Inquiry into the Human Mind was the first direct attack which appeared in Scotland upon the sceptical conclusions of Mr Hume's philosophy. For my own opinion of this work I must refer to one of my former publications, [Memoir of Reid, ut supra]. It is enough to remark here that its great object is to refute the Ideal Theory, which was then in complete possession of the schools, and upon which Dr Reid conceived that the whole of Berkeley's reasonings against the existence of matter was founded. . . . On the refutation of the ideal theory, contained in this and his other works, Dr Reid was disposed to rest his chief merit as an author."—DUGALD STEWART, Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 218.

"He [Dugald Stewart] embraced the philosophy of Dr. Reid, a patient, modest, and deep thinker, who in his first work (En entry into the Human Mind) deserves a commendation more descriptive of a philosopher than that bestowed by Professor Sossin, of having made a vigorous protest against scepticism on behalf of common sense. His observations on suggestion, on natural signs, on the connection between what he calls sensation and conception, though perhaps occasioned by Berkeley, whose idealism Reid had once adopted, are marked by the genuine spirit of original observation.—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Second Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 387. republished in his Miscell. Works, ed 1854, i 216.

"The most original and important of all his writings, and the groundwork of all the rest"—Edin. Rev., lvi. 220.

Hume himself was not insensible to the merit of his formidable adversary, and was candid enough to commend his treatment of the subject:

"It is certainly very rare," he writes to Reid, "that a piece so deeply philosophical is wrote with so much spirit, and affords so much entertainment to the reader. . . I must do you the justice to own, that, when I entered into your ideas, no man appears to express himself with greater perspicuity than you do; a talent which, above all others, is requisite in that species of literature which you have cultivated." Vide Stewart's Memoir of Dr. Reid.

Of the editions of the Intellectual Powers as pub. separately, we notice: London, 1827, 8vo, edited by Rev. G. N. Wright, 1843, 8vo; by Rev. J. Walker, Camb., Mass., 1850, &c., 12mo, (see HAMILTON, SIR WILLIAM, p. 777, supra;) Edin., 1853, or 8vo; by Sir Wm. Hamilton, 1854, 8vo; Lon., 1865, cr. 8vo.

Of the Active Powers separately, we notice the ed. of Rev. G. N. Wright, with the Essay on Quantity, Memoir, and Notes, Lon., 1843, 8vo. The Essays on the Intellectual Powers and Essays on the Active Powers, with the Essay on Quantity and the Analysis of Aristotle's Logic, with Stewart's Account of Reid, were pub. together, under the title of Essays on the Powers of the Human Mind, Edin., 1803, 3 vols. 8vo; 1808, 3 vols. 8vo; 1812, 3 vols. 8vo; 1813, 3 vols. 8vo; 1819, 3 vols. 8vo, 1820, 3 vols. 12mo; 1822, 3 vols. 18mo; with Notes by G. N. Wright, Lon., 1843, 2 vols. 8vo. Of tomes ii.-vi., (Paris, 1828-9,) Œuvres complètes de Thomas Reid, Chef de l'Ecole écossaise, publiées par M. Th. Jouffroy, avec des Fragments de M. Royer-Collard, et une Introduction de l'Éditeur, a review, by Sir William Hamilton, was pub in Edinburgh Review, Oct. 1830, 158-207. Philosophy of Perception, Reid and Brown; repub. in Hamilton's Discussion on Philosophy and Literature. But it is to Sir William himself, as already stated, that we are indebted for the best-known collection of Reid's Works. The volume referred to at p. 777, Edin., 1847, 8vo, 5th ed., 1858, 8vo, ended abruptly at p. 914. The remaining pages, with a general Preface, Indexes, and titles for binding in two volumes, were promised by the editor, but not supplied by him. The editors of Sir William's Lectures on Metaphysics and Logic—Messrs Mansel and Veitch—tell us that Sir William's Lectures on Metaphysics, as edited by them, "never were revised by him with any view to publication, and this chiefly for the reason that he intended to make use of various portions of them which had not been incorporated in his other writings, in the promised Supplementary Dissertations to Reid's Works,—a design which his failing health did not permit him to complete."—Preface to Sir W. Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, Boet., 1860, vii-viii. See, also, ix., x, Hamilton's Discussions on Philos and Lit.

But we can now commend to the reader: The Works of Thomas Reid, D.D., now Fully Collected, with Selections from his Unpublished Letters, Preface, Notes, and Supplementary Dissertations, by Sir William Hamilton, Bart.; Prefixed, Stewart's Account of the Life and Writings of Reid, Sixth Edition, Edin., 1863, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. xxiii., 1034, 30s. Supplementary Part, to complete former Editions, 1863, 8vo, 6s.

From the many learned opinions before us of the peculiarities and merits of Reid's philosophical tenets, our quotations must needs be few in number and brief in extent.

First let us hear Reid's own estimate—a very humble one—of his services to philosophy:

"The merit of what you are pleased to call my Philosophy does, I think, chiefly in having called in question the common theory of Ideas or Images of things in the mind being the only objects of thought, a theory founded on natural prejudices, and so universally received as to be interwoven with the structure of language. Yet were I to give you a detail of what led me to call in question this theory, after I had long held it as self-evident and unquestionable, you would think, as I do, that there was much of chance in the matter. The discovery was the birth of time, not of genius, and Berkeley and Hume did more to bring it to light than the man that hit upon it. I think there is hardly any thing that can be called mine in the philosophy of the mind, which does not follow with ease from the detection of this prejudice."—Letter to Dr. James Gregory: Reid's Works, Hamilton's ed., 83.

We continue our quotations:

"The author of an Inquiry into the Mind, and of subsequent Essays on the Intellectual and Active Powers of Man, has great merit in the effect to which he has pursued this history. But, considering the point at which the science stood when he began his inquiries, he has perhaps no less merit in having removed the mist of hypothesis and metaphor with which the subject was enveloped, and in having taught us to state the facts of which we are conscious, not in figurative language, but in the terms which are proper to the subject. In this it will be our advantage to follow him, the more that, in former theories, so much attention had been paid to the introduction of ideas or images as the elements of knowledge, that the belief of any external existence or prototype has been left to be inferred from the mere idea or image; and this inference, indeed, is so little founded, that many who have come to examine its evidence have thought themselves warranted to deny it altogether. And hence the criticism of ingenious men, who, not seeing a proper access of knowledge through the medium of ideas, without considering whether the road they had been directed to take was the true or a false one, denied the possibility of arriving at the end."—DR. ADAM FERGUSON Prin. of Moral and Political Science, vol. i.

"Who carried the torch of severe and sagacious inquiry into the recesses of the human mind, and weaned men from the endless maze of metaphysical scepticism? Dr. Reid."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON Essays, 1850, ii. 425. See, also, his History of Europe, 1789-1816, chap. ix.

This estimate will hardly be admitted without controversy. An eminent critic, already cited, remarks of Pascal,

"His philosophical glances are wonderful. The summary of arguments for scepticism and dogmatism, especially the latter, is perhaps the best in ancient or modern philosophy. The last contains, in a single page, the whole system of Dr. Reid, and it is but little to add that it contains in the first sentence (L'unique fort des Dogmatistes c'est qu'en parlant de bonne foi, on ne peut douter des principes naturels) the whole book of Dr. Beattie."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH Journal, 1808, Life, vol. i., chap. viii.

See, also, Prof. Ogilvie's letter to Mackintosh, in this chapter.

"Dr. Reid's great achievement was, undoubtedly, the subversion of the Ideal system, or the confutation of that hypothesis which represents the immediate objects of the mind in perception as certain images or pictures of external objects conveyed by the senses to the sensorium. This part of his task it is now generally admitted that he has performed with exemplary diligence and complete success, but we are by no means so entirely satisfied with the uses he has attempted to make of his victory."—LORD JEFFREY Stewart's Life of Reid, Edin. Rev., Jan. 1804, 281. repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed 1863, 628. See, also, 641, 642.

"The great aim of Reid's philosophy, then, was to investigate the true theory of perception, to controvert the representationist hypothesis, as held in one sense or another by almost all preceding philosophers; and to stay the progress which scepticism, aided by this hypothesis, was so rapidly making. That Reid has done much for the advancement of mental science, is almost universally admitted to complain that he did not accomplish more, or follow out the track which he opened to its furthest results, is perhaps unreasonable, since we ought rather to look for the completion of his labours from the hands of his followers, than demand from himself at once the foundation and the superstructure."—Morrell's Hist. of Mod. Philos., 2d ed., Lon., 1847, i 281-286. See, also, 65, 128-132, ii 8-5, 60, 69.

Thomas Reid, a sincere inquirer after truth, who maintained the existence of certain principles of knowledge, independent of experience, and treated moral philosophy as the science of the human mind, allowing it, however, no other foundation than that of Common Sense, or a species of Intellectual Instinct."—Tennemann's Manual of the Hist. of Philos., trans by Johnson, Oxf., 1832, 382.

Let us refer to a few other foreign authorities.

"You can read in the translation of one of the best pupils of the Normal School, now my colleague in this faculty, the judicious Reid, with the truly superior commentary of M. Royer-Collard. The Scotch philosophy will prepare you for the German philosophy. It is to Reid and to Kant that I refer in great part the polemics which I have instituted against empiricism in the person of Locke."—M. VICTOR COUSIN Course of the Hist. of Mod. Philos., trans by O. W. Wight, N. York, 1854, ii 433, and 244; i 314, 341.

See, also, Cousin's Leçons, vii. and viii., and then compare with them Dr. Chalmers's arguments in N. Brit. Rev., Feb. 1847.

"Dr. Reid has not even attained the solitary end of refutation; for all the conclusions of his countrymen, Berkeley and Hume, as to the non-existence of matter and spirit, can be argued as well from his more ideal system as from Locke's Ideal,—from Reid's impressions as from Locke's ideas. Nay, more—Reid leaves the existence of external objects resting even upon a less solid proof than that left by his sceptical antagonists. For they argued but the possibility of its non-existence, whereas he says its existence is suggested to us. Where's the difference? 'Tis true, he proceeds to invest this suggestion with the dignity and force of being a primary law of nature,—a supposition which any man's senses will reject, without my taking the trouble to disprove it eminently from the system of the Scotch philosopher himself."—Sulla Scuola Scotista di Metafisica, Parte Prima: Opera di Giambattista Magalotti, Padova, 1824. vide Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1824, 227.

"La philosophie de Reid et de l'école écossaise est une philo-perception des sens commun; elle n'est susceptible d'aucune autre définition; elle n'est ni sensualiste, ni rationaliste, ni partiel; elle participe de chacun de ces systèmes pour autant qu'ils s'accordent avec le sens commun, mais elle-même forme moins un système, dont toutes les parties soient liées par un principe organique, qu'un ensemble de vérités détachées dont toute la liaison consiste dans leur conformité aux décrets du bon sens.

"Cette philosophie a d'incontestables mérites, elle a reconnu un grand nombre de vérités premières qui avaient été trop souvent niées ou absorbées dans les vues systématiques des doctrines antérieures; telles sont, par exemple, la distinction réelle de l'esprit et du corps, l'activité de l'âme à tous les degrés de la connaissance, la nature diverse de la connaissance sensible ou contingente et de la connaissance rationnelle ou nécessaire, et les principes ou les axiomes de la philosophie. Reid a ainsi sanctionné, par l'opinion commune, la vérité relative du sensualisme et du rationalisme pur, en se gardant de leurs tendances et de leurs caractères exclusifs. Mais, au lieu de s'élever à un point de vue supérieur qui domine à la fois le sensualisme et le rationalisme pur, qui les complète l'un et l'autre et les transforme dans la doctrine harmonique de la science, il se place à un point de vue inférieur, où ces doctrines opposées se rencontrent également, mais sans se pénétrer et s'unir, il se place au point de vue, non de la raison absolue, mais du sens commun."—Essai théorique et historique sur la Génération des Connaissances humaines, par Thierghien, Bruxelles, 1844. vide Blakey's Hist. of the Philos of Mind, Lon., 1850, lii 534-535 See, also, 157, 187, 208, 427, 633; i 89; li 242, 245, iv 40

"It may be here remarked that what Malebranche has properly called the judgment of the mind as to the cause of its sensations, is precisely what Reid denominates perception, a term less clear, and which seems to have led some of his school into important errors. The language of the Scottish philosopher appears to imply that he considered perception as a distinct and original faculty of the mind, rather than what it is, a complex operation of the judgment and memory, applying knowledge already acquired by experience. Neither he nor his disciple Stewart, though aware of the mistakes that have arisen in this province of metaphysics by selecting our instances from the phenomena of vision instead of the other senses, have avoided the same source of error."—Hallam's Lit Hist of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, li 328 See, also, 327, n, li 433, 442, n

It is only just to allow Stewart to be heard in explanation of his master's doctrine of Perception

"To what then, it may be asked, does this statement amount? Merely to this: that the mind is so formed that certain impressions produced on our organs of sense by external objects are followed by correspondent sensations, and that these sensations (which have no more resemblance to the qualities of matter than the words of a language have to the things they denote) are followed by a perception of the existence and qualities of the bodies by which the impressions are made, that all the steps of this process are equally incomprehensible, and that, for any thing we can prove to the contrary, the connection between the sensation and the perception, as well as that between the impression and the sensation, may be both arbitrary, that it is therefore by no means impossible that our sensations may be merely the occasions on which the correspondent perceptions are excited, and that, at any rate, the consideration of these sensations, which are attributes of mind, can throw no light on the manner in which we acquire our knowledge of the existence and qualities of body. From this view of the subject it follows that it is the external objects themselves, and not any species or images of the objects, that the mind perceives, and that, although by the constitution of our nature certain sensations are rendered the constant antecedents of our perceptions, yet it is just as difficult to explain how our perceptions are obtained by their means, as it would be upon the supposition that the mind were all at once inspired with them, without any concomitant sensations whatever."—Stewart's Works, li 111, 112

But Reid's doctrine of Perception has been most strangely misunderstood and misrepresented by his later commentators, as is conclusively shown by the latest and the greatest. To his annotations the student has already been referred; but we shall oblige him by quoting a few lines which bear directly upon the point under consideration.

"Dr Reid has many merits as a speculator, but the only merit which he arrogates to himself—the principal merit accorded to him by others—is that he was the first philosopher, in more recent times, who dared, in his doctrine of immediate perception to vindicate, against the unanimous authority of philosophers, the universal conviction of mankind. But this doctrine he has at best imperfectly developed, and, at the same time, has unfortunately obscured it by errors of so singular a character that some acute philosophers—for Dr. Brown does not stand alone [Priestley, Gleig, Beasley, and others are subsequently named, vide p 298]—have never even suspected what his doctrine of perception actually is. In my last Lecture, [XXIII.] having concluded the review of Reid's Historical Account of Opinions on Perception, and of Brown's Attack upon that account, [see Brown's Lects on the Philos of the Human Mind, Lects. XXV, XXVI,] I proceeded to the question,—Is Reid's own doctrine of perception a scheme of Natural Realism? that is, did he accept in its integrity the dictum of consciousness,—that we are immediately cognitive both of the phenomena of matter and of the phenomena of mind? or did he, like Brown, and the greater number of more recent philosophers, as Brown assumed, hold only the finer form of the representative hypothesis, which supposes that, in perception, the external reality is not the immediate object of consciousness, but that the ego is only determined in some unknown manner to represent the non-ego, whose representation, though only a modification of mind, or self, we are compelled by an illusion of our nature, to mistake for a modifica-cation of matter, or not-self? I stated to you how on the determination of this question depended nearly the whole of Reid's philosophical reputation, his philosophy professes to subvert the foundations of Idealism and scepticism, and it is as having accomplished what he thus attempted, that any principal or peculiar glory can be awarded to him. But if all he did was merely to explode the crude hypothesis of representation, and to adopt in its place the finer,—why, in the first place, so far from depriving Idealism and scepticism of all basis, he only placed them on one firmer and more obscure; and, in the second, so far from originating a new opinion, he could only have added one to a class of philosophers who, after the time of Arnauld, were continually on the increase, and who, among the contemporaries of Reid himself, certainly constituted the majority. His philosophy would thus be at once a silly blunder; its pretence to originality only in proclamation of ignorance; and, so far from being an honour to the nation from which it arose and by whom it was respected, it would, in fact, be a scandal and a reproach to the philosophy of any country in which it met with any milder treatment than derision. I then detailed to you the grounds on which it ought to be held that Reid's doctrine of Perception is one of Natural Realism, and not a form of Cosmthetic Idealism, as supposed by Brown. Having concluded the argument by which I endeavoured to satisfy you that Reid's doctrine is Natural Realism, I should now proceed to show that Natural Realism is a more philosophical doctrine than Hypothetical Realism."—Sir Wm Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, Lects. XIII., XXIV., Boet, 1859, 155, 327, 329

In the second edition (1857) of his Biographical History of Philosophy, Mr Lewes remarks,

"Since the first edition of this work, Sir W Hamilton has published an edition of Reid, illustrated and enriched by notes and dissertations of incomparable erudition and acuteness. Respecting the interpretation Sir William gives to Reid's doctrines, I will only say that he has shown what a subtle mind can read into the philosophy of common sense, but he has not in the least produced the conviction in me of Reid's having meant what the illustrious successor supposed him to have meant. At the same time, I will add that, the limits of my work having restricted me to the consideration of Reid's contributions to Philosophy, (in the narrow sense of the term,) I have not done justice to his many excellent qualities as a teacher. His works are well worthy of diligent study, and their spirit is eminently scientific."—p. 629.

Surely the perplexed tyro may well ask, with the doubter of old, "What is truth?" Stewart labours with the friendly zeal of a disciple and a convert to enable us to understand Reid; Priestley, Gleig, Beasley, and Brown endeavour to prove that Reid did not understand himself, Sir William Hamilton says that these acute philosophers "have never even suspected what Reid's doctrine actually is," and now Mr. Lewes avows his disbelief of Reid's having meant what Sir William Hamilton "supposed him to have meant!" Our own discretion in referring the reader to Reid himself, and to his commentators, instead of attempting to present a synopsis of his philosophy ourselves, will hardly be questioned.

We know not what the reader will think of us when we add to the above that the "chaste and simple diction" of Reid has been commended to the imitation of the student; but a moment's thought will suffice to satisfy us that these qualities of style are not inconsistent with obscurity of sentiment. Whether, however, "the ease, perspicuity, and purity of style" which Mr Stewart claims for his "guide, philosopher, and friend" will be so readily allowed, we leave to the decision of the reader.

It will readily be believed, again to quote Sir William, that "There is a great want of precision in Reid's account of Perception and Sensation. Reid cannot escape censure for ambiguity and vagueness."—Lects. on Metaphysics, Lect. XXIV. 332, 333.

Sir William well remarks,

"That Reid, a distinguished philosopher, and even the founder of an illustrious school, could be so greatly misconceived as that an eminent disciple [Dr Brown] of that school itself should actually reverse the fundamental principle of his doctrine,—this may excite your wonder, but it ought not to move you to disparage either the talent of the philosopher misconceived or of the philosopher misconceiving. It ought, however, to prove to you the permanent importance, not only in speculation, but in practice, of precise thinking. You ought never to rest content, so long as there is aught vague or indefinite in your reasonings,—so long as you have not analyzed every notion into its elements, and excluded the possibility of all lurking ambiguity in your expressions. One great, perhaps the one greatest, advantage resulting from the cultivation of Philosophy, is the habit it induces of vigorous thought, that is, of allowing nothing to pass without a searching examination, either in your own speculations, or in those of others. We may never, perhaps, arrive at truth, but we can always avoid self-contradiction."—Ibid. Lect. XXIII 325

"In comparing Dr Reid's publications at different periods of his life, it is interesting to observe his growing partiality for the aphoristical style. Some of his 'Essays on the Intellectual and Active Powers of Man' are little more than a series of detached paragraphs, consisting of leading thoughts, of which the reader is left to trace the connection. It is own sagacity."—Douglas Stewart. Memoir of Reid.

Rennell, Major James, 1742-1830, a native of Chudleigh, Devonshire, entered the Royal Navy at the age of fifteen, and when twenty-four was transferred to the army, in which he gained great distinction in India under Lord Clive, and was promoted to a Majority and appointed Surveyor-General of Bengal. In his travels in Asia and Africa he was an indefatigable inquirer and a close observer, and cast more light upon the geography and topography of those countries than any of his British predecessors. On his return to England, in 1782, he occupied himself with the preparation of those great works (vide infra) which embody the results of his learned investigations. 1 Chart of the Bank and Currents of Cape Agulhas, 1778. 2. A Bengal Atlas, 1781, fol. 3. Memoir of a Map of Hindoostan, or, The Mogul Empire, with an Introduction, &c., 1783, '85, '88, '92, '93, 4to. "The most valuable work extant relative to the Geography and Political State of India"—PINKERTON.

"For geographical research, this work justly bears the highest character."—Sevenson's Cat. of Voy and Trav., No 730

"Our geography of India is improved by commerce and conquest, and has been illustrated by the excellent Maps and Memoir of Major Rennell. If he extends the sphere of his inquiries with the same critical knowledge and sagacity, he will succeed, and may surpass, the first of modern geographers, [D'Anville]."

His excellent Memoir on his Map of Hindoostan. The rivers of the Punjab, the five eastern branches of the Indus, have been laid down for the first time with truth and accuracy in Major Rennell's incomparable map of Hindoostan. In his Critical Memoir he illustrates with great judgment and learning the marches of Alexander and Timour.—Gibbon's Decline and Fall, chaps xl, lvi, lxx, Notes

Nor should we omit to record the fact that this work of Rennell's suggested Dr. Wm Robertson's Historical Disquisition concerning the Knowledge which the Ancients had of India, 1791, 4to. See Preface and Notes; Stewart's Life of Robertson, Appendix. The works of the brothers Schlagintweit on Asia are shortly to appear in an English version in London, in nine vols., with 120 maps and illustrations. This is indeed a work of wonderful ability,—especially when it is remembered that the author, from his ignorance of Greek, was dependent on the inaccurate (though often elegant) version of Beloe, pub. 1791, 1806, 1812, 1822, each ed. in 4 vols. 8vo, again, 1831, 3 vols. 8vo; 1831, 8vo. see BELOE, WILLIAM, pp. 162, 163, supra. This work gives us the results of the collation of the log-books of many of the ships of war and Indiamen which had ploughed these great waters during the preceding thirty or forty years. The Wind and Current Charts and Sailing Directions of Dr. Maury (vide p. 1249, supra) have superseded Rennell's investigations.

Major Rennell also contributed valuable geographical and other papers to Phil. Trans., 1781, '91, '93, 1809, '15; Nie. Jour., 1798, (see Watt's Bibl. Brit.); the Asiatic Researches and Register; and the Trans. of the Royal and Antiquarian Society. See Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1830, 561, (Obituary); Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, vol. ii. chap. ii., Journal, Aug. 24, 1811. The testimony of Gibbon to the eminent merits of our author has been cited above; and the reader may remember another quotation from the historian, on the same subject, in our life of John Pinkerton. To that article we also refer him for the titles of many valuable works on Travels, Voyages, and Geography. We have imagined the delight with which Rennell would peruse Rawlinson's Herodotus: how greatly, also, would he have enjoyed a few days and nights given to the grand geographical collection of Karl Ritter, (just deceased,) at this moment (May, 1860) offered for sale at Berlin!

Rennell, Thomas, D.D., 1754-1840, grandson of the preceding; educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge; became curate of Barnack, and, in 1771, Prob. of Winchester, (resigned, 1797;) Rector of St. Magnus, London Bridge, 1792; Master of the Temple, 1797-1827; Dean of Winchester, 1805; Rector of Alton, Hants, 1809; Vicar of Barton Stacey, Hants, 1814. In 1786 he married the eldest daughter of Sir William Blackstone. He pub. a number of single Sermons, Lon., 1793-98, and in 1801 fourteen of his Discourses on Various Subjects were pub. collectively in an octavo volume. His Sermon on Gaming, 1794, 8vo, was commended in Pursuits of Lit. (Dial. III., Note 38) as "written with great energy, erudition, piety, patriotism, and eloquence;" and the same severe critic eulogizes his Sermon on the Services rendered to the English Nation by the Church of England, 1796, 8vo, as very able, learned, and eloquent, (Dial. IV., Note 160.) In 1798 his Commencement Sermon, (Ignorance productive of Atheism, &c.) in which he exposed the true character of the French Revolution, gained for him from Mr. Pitt the title of "The Demosthenes of the Pulpit." The Rev. Sydney Smith, who reviewed his vol. of Sermons, (1801, 8vo,) in the Edin. Rev., Oct. 1802, (repub. in Smith's Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, i. 10-19,) whilst praising his Sermon on Gaming, blames him

"for having selected for publication so many sermons touching directly and indirectly upon the French Revolution. We confess ourselves long since wearied with this kind of discourses, bespattered with blood and brains, and tinged eternal changes upon atheism, cannibalism, and apostasy. Dr. Rennell is apt to put on the appearance of a holy bully, an evangelical swaggeter, as if he could carry his point against infidelity by big words and strong abuse, and kick and cuff men into Christianity."—pp. 87-88.

Being the whole Works on Landscape Gardening and Landscape Architecture of the late Humphry Repton, Esq., with Biographical Notice, and Notes, by J. C. Loudon, F.L.S., &c.

"Mr. Repton's Works consist of two folio and quarto volumes illustrated with numerous plates, which, when published, cost upwards of £25, but, by reducing the plates, and printing in a small type, the whole is got into an octavo volume, price 30s. The practical value of Mr. Repton's writings to the Landscape Gardener is universally known"—Advertisement.

"A highly acceptable work, from the pen of the tasteful Mr. Repton, enriched with practical notes by Mr. Loudon"—United Service Gazette.

"Repton's Works,—the works of one of the ablest and most experienced landscape-gardeners England can boast of,—from the high price at which they were originally published, have been hitherto inaccessible to the practical gardener, and even to the amateur proprietor of moderate means. They are now put, by Mr. Loudon, within the reach of both."—Scotsman

Reyner is said to have profited by the collections of Dr. John Jones, Prior of St. Gregory's, and Father Augustin Baker: see BAKER, DAVID, supra; Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., ii. 500, 604, iii. 14.

"But the chief of our historians of this order was Clement Reyner, whose elaborate book is entitled. . . His business is to prove that the order was brought hither by Augustine, Archbishop of Canterbury, and he is thought to have fairly answered all the objections against it"—Bishop Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed 1776, 123

Reyner's Apostolatus was answered by a brother Benedictine, (see BARNES, JOHN, supra.)

"This was very ill resented by those of the fraternity, and other members of the Roman church, and they had some reason to be angry at one of their own body's using the book more scurvily than any of the Protestant writers had done"—BISHOP NICOLSON, ut supra.

"Which [Barnes's answer] being esteemed a piece savouring of too much imprudence and contradiction, if not heresy, it was prohibited the reading by the brethren, and thrown aside among unlicensed and heretical books, and soon after had a reply published against it, which in some copies of the Apostolatus is put at the end, without a name to it, or any naming of Barnes."—ATHEN. OXON., ii. 500

Such copies—indeed, copies of any kind—of the Apostolatus are very rare. The work is of great value to the historical student.

Reynolds, Edward, D.D., 1599–1676, a native of Southampton, educated at, and Probationer Fellow of, Merton College, Oxford, 1620, Preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and Rector of Brayton, Northamptonshire; joined the Presbyterian party, 1642, one of the Assembly of Divines, 1643, and took the Covenant; Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, and Vice-Chancellor of the University, 1648; refused the "Engagement," and ejected from his deanery, 1651; Vicar of St. Lawrence, Jewry, London, restored to his deanery, 1659, Chaplain to Charles II, Warden of Merton College, and Bishop of Norwich, all in 1660.

He published many sermons, theological treatises, and expositions of Scripture, of which we notice 1. Of the Passions and Faculties of the Soul of Man, Lon., 1640, 4to. This, it has been remarked, is "more distinguished by its pleasing composition than by profound metaphysical acumen" 2. His Judgment concerning Episcopacy, 1641, 4to. 3. Israel's Petition in Time of Trouble, a Serm., 1642, 4to. 4. Israel's Prayer in Time of Trouble, with God's Gracious Answer thereunto; or, An Exposition of the XIV. It has been remarked that "His [Reynolds's] exposition must not be resorted to for biblical criticism, but for sound evangelical theology and practical observations"

But what shall be said of the impertinent officiousness of Mr. Editor Washbourne, who coolly acknowledges that he has "deemed it necessary to alter the construction of most of the sentences; frequently to exchange obsolete words for those now in use; and in a few sentences to omit redundant paragraphs?"

He professes, indeed, that "the author's ideas are strictly and fully retained;" which reminds us of the threat of the cautious connoisseur to the carrier,—that if he "broke off a limb of the precious ancient Apollo he was transporting, he should pay for a new one." See, also, No. 11. When will this refurbishing of the works of old masters cease? See p. 374, (CHAUCER, GEOFFREY), 630, (FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN), supra.

Here also the author's language has been abridged, and "a few obsolete words exchanged for others of the same meaning"! See No. 6. 12. Meditations on the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 1639, sm. 4to.

"A performance perfectly stupendous for a student who had not reached his twentieth year. It displays an extent and variety of erudition for which it would probably be vain to search in the exercises of any modern student of theology"—British Critic.

The last paragraph is in very bad taste.

13. Meditations for every Day in the Year; ed. by Rev. C. Smalley, 12mo, 1838; 1848. A collective edit. of his Works was pub in 1658, fol.; a better one, 1678-79, 2 vols. fol., (some copies on large paper); a still better one in 1826, 6 vols. 8vo, under the title of The Whole Works of Edward Reynolds, D.D., Lord Bishop of Norwich, now first collected, with a Life of the Author, by Alexander Chalmers, and finely engraved Portrait, £3.

"It is now our pleasing duty to congratulate the public upon a complete collection of the writings of one of the most eminent among the divines of the seventeenth century. The present edition of the Works of Bishop Reynolds forms a most valuable accession to our stores of sound and masculine theology. It is but just to add that, though carefully and handsomely printed, its price is extremely moderate."—Lon Chris Remem, Nov. 1826.

"We cordially rejoice at this republication, and at the state of taste and feeling which called for it. The writings of this divine are entitled to an honourable rank in the theology of our country."

"The student, who attentively peruses them, cannot fail greatly to enlarge his stores of all the most valuable commonplaces of divinity, and at the same time to enrich his mind with a vast variety of original matter"—British Critic, July, 1828.

"The memoir is unsatisfactory, but an Index of Scriptures and copious Tables of Contents accompany the work."

There has also been pub. Selections from the Works of Bishop Reynolds, with a Portrait and a Brief Sketch of his Life, by William Wilson, D.D., 18mo. We have already quoted (see MILNER, JOSEPH, No. 9) Mr. Bickersteth's enthusiastic eulogy on Reynolds's Sermons we add a few lines to the same effect.

"Of the Sermons of Reynolds, in common with those of many other mighty divines of that period, it may also be said that they are luminaries, capable of being 'cut into little stars,' each of which might make a tolerably respectable figure in the firmament of modern theology."—Brit Critic.

"Reynolds's sermons contain extensive learning happily applied, much beauty of illustration, clear statement, and eloquent appeal, they bear the traces, not to be mistaken, of exalted piety and deep anxiety concerning the souls of men"—Lon Elec Rev.

We continue our quotations:

"He was a person of excellent parts and endowments, of a very good wit, fancy, and judgment, a great divine, and much esteemed by all parties for his preaching and florid style"—Bliss's Wood's Athen Oxon, iii 1084.

"A person of great authority as well as fame among the men of the Calvinistical persuasion," &c.—THOMAS PIERCE, D.D. Intro to Divine Purity Defended. Athen. Oxon, ut supra.

"He is a most elaborate writer. He has many surprising similes. His style is remarkably laconic. A world of things are gently touched upon, which shew his extensive acquaintance with human nature, as well as great labour. His works contain a judicious collection of Scriptures both in the text and margin"—DR DODDRIEGE Lects on Preaching.

"He is a writer of great value and deep piety and experience. His sentences are astonishingly terse and full of matter, and his doctrine is thoroughly evangelical, spiritual, and holy. His works have been lately republished, [1826, ut supra] They are a great treasure"—Bickersteth's C S, 4th ed, 283.

Reynolds, Frederick, 1765-1841, the son of the attorney of John Wilkes, left his legal studies for dramatic authorship, and, beginning with the tragedy of Werter, 1786, 8vo, wrote about one hundred dramatic plays, of which many were printed: see the titles of some of these in Biog. Dramat. and Watt's Bibl. Brit. About twenty of his comedies enjoyed popularity, and some are still favourites. Among the best of his pieces are The Dramatist, (Vapid being the hero,) Laugh when You Can, The Will, Folly as it Flies, Speculation, and Fortune's Fool. He served for forty years as a literary hand ("thinker," he called himself) at Covent Garden. He also pub. A Play-Writer's Adventures; a Tale, Lon., 18mo, and his autobiography,—The Life of Frederick Reynolds, Written by Himself, 1826, 2 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1826, 2 vols. Commended by Lon. Month. The Steam Packet, a Tale of the River and the Ocean, 1852, 8vo. A list of fifty-two of his novels will be found in The Bookseller, (London,) July 1, 1868, 448. Many of these have been republished in the United States, and, as intimated above, many more professing to be his have first seen the light on American soil.

"This gentleman," remarks an American acquaintance of Mr. Reynolds, in a letter from London, dated March 25, 1859, "should not be judged in the United States from the character of all the books that bear his name. Such a course would be unjust to both his moral and literary character. He informs me that not one in ten of the transatlantic publications to which his name has been impudently affixed, ever emanated from his pen."

How disgraceful to America that such base forgeries—far more criminal than the mere forgery of a signature—should be justly charged upon any portion of its press!

Reynolds, Sir Joshua, July 16, 1723-Feb. 23, 1792, "the founder of the British School of Painting," a native of Plympton, Devonshire, and the son of the rector of that place, conceived a passion for painting in consequence of the perusal of Jonathan Richardson's Essay on the Theory of Painting, studied for two years and a half under Hudson, the principal portrait-painter of the day; commenced the practice of his profession at his native place, where he made the acquaintance of Captain (afterwards Admiral Lord) Keppel, who proved a most useful patron; came to London in 1746, and three years later went to Italy, where he remained, a zealous disciple of the ancients, until near the close of 1752, recommenced practice in London, and plied the brush with increasing success, first in St. Martin's Lane, then in Great Newport Street, and subsequently, from 1761 until his death, in Leicester Square; in 1764, in conjunction with Dr. Johnson instituted the Literary Club, chosen President of the Royal College, and knighted, 1768; Doctor of Laws, Oxford, 1773; Principal Painter-in-Ordinary to the King, 1784. He left about £80,000 in all, (his collection was sold for £16,947 7s. 6d.,) which, as he died a bachelor, was inherited by his niece, Miss Palmer, who became the wife of the Earl of Inchiquin, subsequently created Marquis of Thomond.

"As to his person, in his stature Sir Joshua Reynolds was rather under the middle size, of a florid complexion, roundish, blunt features, and a lively aspect,—not corpulent, though somewhat inclined to it, but extremely active, with manners uncommonly polished and agreeable. In conversation his manner was perfectly natural, simple, and unassuming. He most heartily enjoyed his profession, in which he was both fortunate and illustrious, and I agree with Mr. Malone, who says he appeared to him to be 'the happiest man he had ever known.' He was thoroughly sensible of his rare lot in life, and truly thankful for it; his virtues were blessed with their full reward!"—NORTHCOOTE Memor. of Reynolds

Ample details respecting the productions of this great painter—details which do not come within the plan of this Dictionary—will be found in the authorities cited below. His claims to a place in this record are based upon his fifteen Discourses delivered before the Royal Academy; papers Nos 76, 7v, and 82 (the last-named slightly enlarged by Dr. Johnson) in The Idler, some notes (A Commentary) on Mason's translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting, 1783, 4to, (see Walpole's Letters, ed 1861, viii 170, 187, n.) a few notes for Johnson's edition of Shakespeare, and Criticisms on the works of the Dutch and Flemish painters, made during a Journey in Flanders and Holland in 1781.

Some of these Discourses were published separately in 4to in 1769 et sequitur, and seven were issued together in an octavo volume in 1778. His Works, i. e. the writings above enumerated, with an Account of the Author and his Writings by Edmund Malone, were pub. in 1794, 2 vols 4to, 1797, 2 vols 4to, 1798, 3 vols 8vo; 1801, 3 vols 8vo; 4th ed, 1809, 3 vols. 8vo; again, (with Memoirs by Joseph Farington—in addition to Life, by Malone—also pub separately, 1819, 8vo,) 1819, 3 vols. 8vo again, 1824, 3 vols. 12mo.

1. Memoirs of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Knt. by J. Northcote, 1813, 4to, &c. see NORTHCOOTE, JAMES, No 1; Edin. Rev., xxiii. 263-292, Anales Mag. ii 508, iii 80, xiii. 239; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1818, 757. An interleaved copy of Northcote's Reynolds, with many MS. additions, apparently intended for a new edition, was offered by T. & W. Boone, London, in 1858, for £4.

2. Memoirs of Sir Joshua Reynolds; with some Observations on his Talents and Character, by Joseph Farington, 1819, 8vo. In addition to the Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds, by Edmund Malone, Esq. Also prefixed to Farington's ed. of Reynolds's Literary Works, 1819, 3 vols. 8vo. Of these Memoirs, the object of which was to defend the Royal Academy against Malone's censures with respect to the dispute between Reynolds and the institution, reviews will be found in Edin. Rev. Aug 1820, 79-108, and Blackw. Mag., Feb 1821, 570-578.

3. Sir Joshua Reynolds's Graphic Works, consisting of 358 engravings (comprising 437 subjects) after Reynolds's paintings, engraved on steel by S. W. Reynolds, 1820-36, r. fol. 60 Nos., each £1 5s; proofs on French paper, £2 2s.; proofs on India paper, £2 12s. 6d.; £157 10s. for the 60 Nos. The same, 300 plates, 1833, 3 vols fol., £36. New edition, 1834-37, fol., 200 plates, in 40 Nos., £21. Continuation of the Engraved Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Engraved by Mr. Frederick Bromley, fol., Parts 1-6, 1863. See Lon. Reader, 1863, i. 136. To these collections should be added: Designs for the celebrated Painted Window in New College Chapel, at Oxford; a Collection of Engravings taken from Reynolds's Oxford Window, &c., 32 plates, 1785; The West Window of New Chapel, Oxford, engraved by Facius, atlas fol.; the same, engraved by S. W. Reynolds, 1834, fol., 10 plates. See, also, A Descriptive Catalogue of all the Prints, with the Engravers' Names and Dates, which have been engraved from Original Portraits and Pictures, collected by Edmund Wheatley, 1825, 12mo, and note Catalogue of Portraits engraved from Pictures of Sir J. Reynolds, 1794, 4to, and list of engravings after Sir Joshua Reynolds, in Selections from Gent. Mag. vol. iv.

4. Sir Joshua Reynolds's Literary Works; comprising his Discourses, Journey, Criticisms on Pictures, Comment on Du Fresnoy, &c., and Idlers; with Memoir of the Author, &c., by Henry William Beechey, 1835, 3 vols. fp. 8vo; again, (Bohn's Stand. Lib., vols. lxxviii. and lxx.) 1846; 1851; 1862. See Dubl. Univ. Mag., xiii. 189; Lon. Athen., 1836, 103, 155.

5. Sir Joshua Reynolds's Discourses, illustrated by Explanatory Notes and Plates by John Burnet, F.R.S., (with 12 engravings, executed in bistre and aquatint,) 1842, 4to, £2 2s.; i. p. India proofs, r. 4to, £4 4s. Reviewed in Blackw. Mag., iii. 767, iii. 181, 589. See, also, Sir Joshua Reynolds's Discourses, infra. The Discourses were also pub. in Sharpe's Prose Writers, 1821, 2 vols. 18mo, and in 1 vol. 12mo, s. a. An edition of the Discourses was pub. at Hudson, Ohio, 1853, 12mo; and his Life and Discourses, N. York, 1859, 12mo.

6. Sir Joshua Reynolds and his Works: Gleanings from his Diary, Unpublished Manuscripts, and from other Sources, by William Cotton, M.A., of the University of Oxford; edited by John Burnet, Lon., Dec. 1856, 8vo. See No 7.

"The book is, in fact, no biography, but a bundle of notes,—fragments from diaries,—a rag-bag of different opinions on Reynolds. A page of our own paper would have held all the fresh matter collected by this new biographer. What is old is stale, what is new is dull."—Lon. Athen., Jan 3, 1857, 11

"Nothing but the contents of a paper-basket carelessly sorted out and patched together."—Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb 1857, 208

7. A Catalogue of the Portraits painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Knt., F.R.A., compiled from his Autograph Memorandum-Books and four Printed Catalogues, &c., by William Cotton, Esq., 1858. Supplement to No. 6. See, also, No. 8.

"Allowing for typographical errors and occasional want of uniformity in point of system, the Catalogue is very serviceable."—Athen., March 27, 1858, 406

8. Sir Joshua Reynolds's Notes and Observations on Pictures, chiefly in the Venetian School, being Extracts from his Italian Sketch-Books; also the Rev. W. Mason's Observations on Sir Joshua's Method of Colouring, and some Unpublished Letters of Dr. Johnson, Malone, and others, with an Appendix, containing a Transcript of Sir Joshua's Account-Book, showing what Pictures he painted, and the Prices paid for them. Edited by William Cotton, Dec. 1858, 8vo, pp. 120.

"The Alphabetical Catalogue given last year should not have been separated from the list of payments published in 1859. Had the author worked the two together, he would have been spared many self-evident errors. As we have already dilated upon the subject of Reynolds's sketch-books, now in America, [see Athen. No 1491,] and have heard much of the volumes in question, we cannot regard this subject with any ordinary interest."—Athen., Feb. 26, 1859, 289

"The most interesting part is that transcribed from W. Mason's MS. by the Rev. John Milford, relative to Sir Joshua's mode of painting."—Gent. Mag., April, 1859, 417

9. Some Account of the Ancient Borough Town of Plympton St. Maurice, or Plympton Earl, with Memoirs of the Reynolds Family, by William Cotton, 8vo.

"But here is Mr. Cotton, impatient about these Reynoldses. Let us go with him."—Athen., April 28, 1860, 579

10. Life and Times of Sir Joshua Reynolds; with Notices of some of his Contemporaries; commenced by Charles Robert Leslie, R.A., continued and collected by Tom Taylor, M.A., 1865, 2 vols. 8vo.

"All that is really to the point in the two volumes might with advantage have been compressed into one, and the reader would probably rise from its perusal with a far better idea of Reynolds than he is likely to extract from the two bulky volumes before us."—Lon. Reader, 1866, i. 478

Leslie's biography was elicited by his dissatisfaction with Allan Cunningham's account of Reynolds. Leslie was the fourth Royal Academician who acted as biographer to Reynolds.—Northcote, Farington, Phillips, Leslie.

But we feel unwilling to conclude this article without quoting a few opinions on its subject considered as a MAN, a WRITER and ART CRITIC, and a PAINTER.

REYNOLDS THE MAN.

No famous character of the day had more friends or fewer enemies than the Knight of Plympton.

"Touched by a personal knowledge of this union of genius and affection, [the reference is to Cowley and Harvey,] even Malone commiserates, with unusual warmth, the literary friendship of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and, with a felicity of fancy not often indulged, has raised an unforced parallel between the bland wisdom of Sir Joshua and the 'mitis sapientis Læli' 'What the illustrious Scipio was to Lælius, was the all-knowing and all-accomplished Burke to Reynolds; and what the elegant Lælius was to his master Pænætius, whom he gratefully protected, and to his companion, the poet Lucilius, whom he patronized, was Reynolds to Johnson, of whom he was the scholar and friend, and to Goldsmith, whom he loved and aided.'"—DISRAELI The Literary Character, in Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1853, 454

"His native humility, modesty, and candour never forsook him, even on surprise or provocation, nor was the least degree of arrogance or assumption visible to the most scrutinizing eye in any part of his conduct or discourse. His talents of every kind, powerful from nature, and not meanly cultivated by letters, his social virtues in all the relations and all the habitudes of life, rendered him the centre of a very great and unparalleled variety of agreeable societies, which will be dissipated by his death. He had too much merit not to excite some jealousy, too much innocence to provoke any enmity. Sir Joshua Reynolds was on very many accounts one of the most memorable men of his time. He was the first Englishman who added the praise of the elegant arts to the other glories of his country. In taste, in grace, in facility, in happy invention, and in the richness and harmony of colouring, he was equal to the great masters of the renowned ages. In portrait he went beyond them, for he communicated to that description of the art in which English artists are the most engaged, a variety, a fancy, and a dignity derived from the higher branches, which even those who professed them in a superior manner did not always preserve when they delineated individual nature. His portraits remind the spectator of the invention of history and of the amenity of landscape. In painting portraits, he appeared not to be raised upon that platform, but to descend to it from a higher sphere. Few individuals have proved themselves so capable of illustrating the theory of the science they professed, by their practice and their discourses. . . . To be such a painter, he was a profound and penetrating philosopher. . . . The loss of no man of his time can be felt with more sincere, general, and unmixed sorrow."—EDMUND BURKE: Lon. Gent. Mag., 1791, i. 190.

As regards Johnson, Boswell remarks that

Again

"Sir Joshua Reynolds, whose philosophical penetration and justness of thinking were not less known to those who lived with him than his genius in his art admired by the world. . . . A nice and delicate observer of manners."—Ibid., chaps. xxiii., xlvii.

But let us hear the magister himself:

"Sir, I know no man who has passed through life with more observation than Reynolds. . . . Reynolds is without a rival, and continues to add thousands to thousands which he deserves. . . . Mr. Reynolds gets six thousand a year, [1762] . . . Sir Joshua Reynolds is the same all the year round. . . . Sir Joshua Reynolds, sir, is the most invulnerable man I know, the man with whom if you should quarrel, you will find the moral difficulty how to abuse."—Ibid., chaps. xiv., xxxiv., liv.

"He had none of those eccentric bursts of action,"—it is one of his own pupils who now speaks,—"those fiery impetuosities, which are supposed by the vulgar to characterize genius, and which are frequently found to accompany a secondary rank of talent, but are never conjoined with the first. His incessant industry was never wearied into despondency by miscarriage, nor elated into negligences by success. All nature and all art combined to form his academy. . . . In conversation he preserved an equable flow of spirits, which rendered him at all times a most desirable companion, ever ready to be amused, and to contribute to the amusement of others. He practised the minute elegances, and, though latterly a deaf companion, was never troublesome."—NORTHCOLE Memoirs of Reynolds.

The melancholy tidings of the death of an honoured host reached an illustrious English recluse in that library which had witnessed the completion of the greatest historical production of the day, and he deploras the loss of "Lord Guildford and Sir Joshua Reynolds, two of the men and two of the houses in London on whom I most relied for the comforts of society."—EDWARD GIBBON to Lord St. Field, Lausanne, Aug. 23, 1792 Gibbon's Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 154.

That considerate kindness to his less fortunate brethren of the brush which was one of Sir Joshua's best-known characteristics was doubtless in the mind of the eulogist who paid the tribute next to be quoted

"Sir Joshua Reynolds remains a memorable proof that it is possible for an artist to unite the highest genius and most imaginative power of mind to the wisdom of a philosopher, the liberality of a gentleman, the benevolence of a Christian, and the simplicity of a child."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON Essays, 1850, iii. 395.

"I declare, I think, of all the polite men of the age, Joshua Reynolds was the finest gentleman."—THACKERAY George III REYNOLDS THE WRITER AND ART CRITIC

"I heard the late Mr. Samuel Rogers, the venerable banker-poet of London, more than once relate that he was present on the 10th of December, 1790, when Sir Joshua Reynolds delivered the last of his discourses before the Royal Academy of Art. Edmund Burke was also one of the audience; and at the close of the lecture Mr. Rogers saw him go up to Sir Joshua, and heard him say, in the fulness of his delight, in the words of Milton,—

"The Angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice, that he awhile
Thought him still speaking, still stood fixed to hear."

EDWARD EVERETT Orations and Speeches, vol. iii., 1859, 638.

It is upon these Discourses that Sir Joshua's fame as a writer, as well as an art critic, rests. The Discourse which immediately preceded (so we judge from our text) that so highly eulogized by Burke was declared by no less a judge than Bishop Percy to be "a perfect standard of this mode of writing." See Nichols's Illust. of Lit. Hist., viii., 1858, 276.

We quote some opinions upon the whole fifteen as collectively published

"Sir Joshua Reynolds's admirable Discourses contain such a body of just criticism on an extremely difficult subject, clothed in such perspicuous, elegant, and nervous language, that it is no exaggerated panegyric to assert that they will last as long as the English tongue, and contribute not less than the productions of his pencil to render his name immortal."—NORTHCOLE

"Golden precepts, which are now acknowledged as canons of universal taste."—SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE

"Hall's guide and glory of the British school,

Whose magic line gave life to every rule."—SOTHLEY

"They are written in an easy, agreeable manner, and contain many just observations, much excellent criticism and valuable advice, but being undertaken before he had profoundly considered the subject, they are frequently vague and unintelligible, and sometimes contradictory."—YERRILL

"Sir Joshua Reynolds in his admirable Discourses—(a series of compositions which present the example of high criticism upon the art of painting, when the true principles of criticism upon poetry were neglected or misunderstood)"—CHARLES KENTON Pictorial Shakespeare: Supp. Notice, King Richard II., ed. 1867, 151

"He is always the same man; the same philosophical, the same artist-like critic, the same sagacious observer, with the same minuteness without the smallest degree of trifling."—EDMUND BURKE Letter to Malone

"While I had Burke in one hand, I held in the other Sir Joshua Reynolds's Discourses, endeavouring to apply to my art the admirable criticisms which he delivers upon painting. I have constantly referred to the liberal precepts which he urges with regard to the study and imitation of the great masters, and I repose with confidence on the idea that the general rules of excellence in all the arts are the same."—FRANÇOIS HORNÉ: Horner's Memoirs and Correspondence

Johnson's commendation (it refers to the Seven Discourses pub. together in 1 vol., 1778, 8vo) will be found recorded in Boswell's Life of the lexicographer, chaps. lxvii. and lxxx.

This was the volume which was rewarded by the Empress of Russia with a gold snuff-box adorned with her profile in bas-relief, set in diamonds, and containing a slip of paper on which was written, by her majesty, que j'ai remeinte à la lecture de ses excellens Discours sur la Peinture."

"Pour le chevalier Reynolds, en témoignage du contentement

"Though Johnson had no taste for painting," remarks Boswell, "he admired much the manner in which Sir Joshua Reynolds treated of his art in his 'Discourses to the Royal Academy.' He observed one day of a passage in them, 'I think I might as well have said this myself!'"

"The two chief points which Sir Joshua aims at in his Discourses are to show that excellence in the Fine Arts is the result of pains and study rather than of genius, and that all beauty, grace, and grandeur are to be found, not in actual nature, but in an idea existing in the mind. On both these points he appears to have fallen into considerable inconsistencies, or very great latitude of expression, so as to make it difficult to know what conclusion to draw from his various reasonings."—Hazlitt Table-Talk, Second Series, Essays XV and XVI. On Some Inconsistencies in Sir Joshua Reynolds's Discourses.

"Another more plausible and ingenious theory [than Diderot's] was suggested by the Pere Buffier, and afterwards adopted and illustrated with great talent in the Discourses of Sir Joshua Reynolds. According to this doctrine, beauty consists, as Aristotle held virtue to do, in mediocrity, or conformity to that which is most usual."—LORD JEFFREY Contrib to Edin. Rev., ed 1863, 9. Nature and Principles of Taste.

"Then, as to Sir Joshua's writings, their spirit is all in delightful keeping with his pictures. One of the few painters—such as Leonardo da Vinci, Michael Angelo, and so on—our own Barry, Opie, Fuseli, and so on—who could express by the pen the principles which guide the pencil. 'Tis the only work on art which to men not artists, is entirely intelligible.'—CHRISTOPHER NORTH, (PROF. WILSON) Noctes Ambros., April, 1829 Blackw. Mag., xxv 541.

"Sir Joshua Reynolds, who has the good fortune to be remembered alike by his pencil and his pen, and whose discourses still remain the most sensible and judicious work on the principles of painting, in our language."—G. S. HILLARD Six Months in Italy, 5th ed., 1856, 78.

"Reynolds discoursed like one inspired when he had his brush in his hand, his colours spread, and his canvases before him. His pictures speak plain. His Discourses are occasionally ambiguous, and sometimes, we fear, not sound."—Lon. Athen., Nov 9, 1833, 745.

"Sir Joshua's profound knowledge in the art he professed, his classical attainments, his polished mind, all appear conspicuous by his literary works. They are treasures of information to the student and to the proficient, and the elegance and chastity of language which pervade them have very seldom been equalled by the most eminent of our writers. In many of his Discourses there are precepts and reflections so deep, philosophical, and comprehensive, as to amount to wisdom of the highest class."—Lon. Month Review.

The dictum of Sir James Mackintosh has already been cited: vide ONIF, JOHN, p. 1460, supra.

"Sir Joshua Reynolds has at last sent me his notes, [on Mason's translation of Du Fresnoy] they are well written, and I think will be of service to the Art."—Rev. W. Mason to H. Walpole, March 2, 1782 Walpole's Letters, ed 1861, viii 187, n.

REYNOLDS THE PAINTER.

As we have already intimated, it is not our business to enter into any elaborate examination of the artist; yet a few quotations respecting his pictures, we are persuaded, will be acceptable to all readers—professional or lay.

The sarcastic eulogy that Sir Joshua came off with "flying colours" had been anticipated by a poetical commentator who drew his inspiration, whilst Reynolds was yet in his youth, from the absence of that which he sought in the artist's canvases:

"The art of painting was at first design'd
To call the dead, our ancestors, to mind;
But this same painter has reversed the plan,
And makes the picture die before the man."

"Sir Joshua Reynolds is a great painter, but, unfortunately, his colours seldom stand longer than crayons."—Horace Walpole to Sir H. Mann, April 22, 1775 Letters, ed. 1861, vi 205. See, also, 211, 514.

Mr. Cotton's Catalogue of Sir Joshua's portraits (vide No. 7, supra) affords, it is alleged, melancholy evidence that the sad effects of the artist's want of chemical skill in compounding colours, thus exhibited in his own day, have been visited in many instances on the third and fourth generations of collectors. (See Athen., March 27, 1858, 407.) But Mr. Phillips has something to say on the head:

"The colouring of Sir Joshua Reynolds in his best works combines the highest qualities of Correggio and Titian with the brilliancy and luxuriance of the Dutch and the Flemish schools, deprived of their tumidities. The common error that his colours all fall, ought by this time to be entirely effaced. It is too true that this is the case with the colouring of many pictures painted by him during a short period of his life, he thought that he had discovered a mode of rendering colouring more vivid, and employed it without duly considering the chemical qualities of his materials. But he was soon made acquainted with the mistake he had committed, reassumed his durable system with increased beauty and vigour, and continued to employ it till the termination of his valuable labours."—Lects. on Painting, 372. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., Sept. 1843, 245, n.

That some of his earliest pictures were in general merit but little behind the best of his later productions, we have his own testimony:

"Upon the whole," remarks one of the most eminent of his associates, "I may apply to the first labour of my pen the speech of a far superior artist when he surveyed the first productions of his pencil. After viewing some portraits which he had painted in his youth, my friend, Sir Joshua Reynolds, acknowledged to me that he was rather humbled than flattered by the comparison with his present works, and that, after much time and study he had conceived his improvement to be much greater than he found it to have been."—EDWARD GIBSON Memoirs of My Life and Writings, Miscellaneous Works, ed 1837, 59. See, also, 133.

"Cet artiste s'est à peine essayé dans le genre historique, où il est resté médiocre, mais dans ses portraits il a déployé un talent d'expression et de coloris très-remarquable, nous dirions volontiers très-original si devant ses meilleurs ouvrages on pouvait oublier Van Dyck, le véritable chef de l'école anglaise. 'Personne,' dit M. Burger, 'n'a plus fait d'expériences que Reynolds en vue de perfectionner les procédés de peinture; il a sacrifié des tableaux vénitiens pour en décomposer les couleurs, en apprécier les couches, en découvrir toutes les pratiques plus ou moins sociées. Ses enseignements étaient les meilleurs du monde, et très-simples. L'art fut sa passion exclusive.'"
—Nouv. Drog. Génér., Didot, Paris, xiii (1866) 87.

"The excellent and philosophic artist, a true judge as well as a perfect follower of nature, Sir Joshua Reynolds."—EDWARD BURKE Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs, 1791.

The opinion of Burke's great rival will appropriately follow.

"Sir Joshua Reynolds—the grand not his forte—liked best his playful characters, not even his Ugolino satisfied him. The boys in his Holy Family exquisite."—CHARLES JAMES FOX Recollec., by S. Rogers, 1850, 43. See, also, 22, 28, 38, 42, 87.

"Nor is he [Sir Joshua Reynolds], in his discourses before the Royal Academy in or last before 1783 judicious in quoting Vanduyck, who at least specified silks, satins, velvets. Sir Joshua's draperies represent clothes, never their materials. Yet more Vanduyck and Sir Godfrey Kneller excelled all painters in hands, Sir Joshua's are seldom even tolerably drawn."—Immac. Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, Feb 10, 1783 Letters, ed 1861, viii 332.

"Sir Joshua's historical paintings have little of the heroic dignity which an inspired mind breathes into compositions of that class. His imagination commonly fails him, and he attempts to hide his want of wings in the unrivalled splendour of his colouring and by the thick-strewn graces of his execution. He is often defective, even where he might have been expected to show the highest excellence, his faces are formal and cold, and the picture seems made up of borrowed fragments which he had been unable to work up into an entire and consistent whole. His single poetic figures are remarkable for their unaffected ease, their elegant simplicity, and the splendour of their colouring."

The portraits of Reynolds are equally numerous and excellent, and all who have written of their merits have swelled their eulogiums by comparing them with the simplicity of Titian, the vigour of Rembrandt, and the elegance and delicacy of Vanduyck. Certainly in character and expression and in many cases he has never been surpassed. He is always equal, always natural, graceful, unaffected. His boldness of posture and his singular freedom of colouring are so supported by all the grace of art, by all the sorcery of skill, that they appear natural and noble. Over the meanest head he sheds the halo of dignity, his men are all nobleness, his women all loveliness, and his children all simplicity, yet they are all like the living originals. He had the singular art of summoning the mind into the face, and making sentiment mingle in the portrait."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.

"The grace and beauty of Sir Joshua Reynolds's portraits was accomplished greatly at the expense of likeness. Hoppner remarked that even to him it was a matter of surprise that Reynolds could send home portraits with so little resemblance to the originals. This occasioned in his day many of his portraits to be left on his hands, or turned to the wall."—Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug. 1843, 129.

But audis alteram partem:

"That the portraits of Reynolds were the best of all likenesses I have no manner of doubt. I know several of his pictures of children, the originals of whom I have seen in middle and old age, and in every instance I could discover much likeness."—CHARLES LESLIE Hand-Book for Young Painters.

And as faithful representations of the "living originals," the illustrious personages of the camp, the council, the palace, the senate, and the bench, who adorned the age of Ogilby, Johnson, Goldsmith, the Walpoles and Burke, and of the Queens of Beauty and Fashion,—

"Whose bright eyes

in each arena of composition,—who shall estimate the value of the Reynolds Portrait Gallery?

"One of the most interesting exhibitions of this season is of Sir Joshua Reynolds's pictures, which have been sent from all parts of the kingdom by the owners, and which are remarkable not only for the genius of the maker, but as a gallery of all the beauties, wits, and heroes of the last sixty years, who have almost all been painted by Sir Joshua."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Letter to his Daughters, May 11, 1815. Life of Mackintosh, ii. chap. iv.

"The spectacle had allured Reynolds from that easel which has preserved to us the thoughtful heads of so many writers and statesmen, and the sweet smiles of so many noble matrons."—LORD MACAULAY Warren Hastings: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841, 242. repub. in his Crit. and Hist. Essays, ed 1854, iii. 180.

Reynolds, Thomas, "The Informer," is so called from the charge alleged against him "of saving Ireland to Great Britain" (T. Moore) by betraying to Government the leaders of the Irish Rebellion of 1798. But his character has been defended in The Life of Thomas Reynolds, of Kilken Castle, in the County of Kildare, by his son, T. Reynolds, Lon., 1839, 2 vols. 8vo, q v for interesting particulars respecting the whole question.

Ricardo, David, M.P., 1772-1823, a native of London, the son of a Jewish broker, formed a business connection with his father, which was shaken by the son's being a Christian convert, and dissolved by his marrying (in 1793) a Christian woman. Entering business on his own account, he soon gave evidence of that energy, promptitude, and good judgment which enabled him to retire from the Stock Exchange in 1818, and to leave £700,000 on his death, in 1823. From 1819 until his decease he was M.P. for the Irish borough of Portarlington, and the opinions of no man in the House of Commons had more weight in all questions of political economy. 1. The High Price of Bullion a Proof of the Depreciation of Bank Notes, Lon., 1810, 8vo; 4th and best ed., with Appendix, 1811, 8vo. This pamphlet, originally pub. in the form of Letters (Sept. 6, 1809 et seq.) in the Morning Chronicle, elicited several replies. See McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 73; Lord Brougham's States. Time Geo. III., ed. 1856, iii 167-168; *Edin. Mr. Ricardo proposed to supersede the use of gold coin, by making bank-notes exchangeable for gold bars of the standard purity at the mint price of gold. The plan was tried for a short time. The Proposals were reviewed in Edin. Rev., xxxi. 53. See, also, McCulloch's *Lit. of Polit. "This is a most able, original, and profound work. Its appearance formed a new era in the history of the science. Exclusive of many valuable correlative discussions, Mr. Ricardo has traced the source and limiting principle of exchangeable value, and has exhibited the laws which determine the distribution of the various products of art and industry among the various ranks and orders of society. . . Mr. Ricardo was the first to perceive the error into which Smith had fallen, in supposing that the effects consequent upon an increase or diminution of the wages paid for the labour employed in the production of commodities were the same with those consequent upon an increase or diminution of the quantity of such labour."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 16

"Consolidating his views in one work, he gave to the world his excellent treatise on his favourite science, which, with Mr. Malthus's Essay on the Principle of Population, divides the claim to a second place after the 'Wealth of Nations,' among the books which this country has produced upon the important science of Economics."—LORD BROUGHAM States Time George III., ed. 1856, li. 168

"He assumed the lands of every country to be of different degrees of fertility, and rent to be the value of the difference between the fertility of the best and of the worst land in cultivation. The remainder of the produce he divided into profit and wages. He assumed that wages naturally amount to neither more nor less than the amount of commodities necessary to maintain the labourer and his family in health and strength. He assumed that in the progress of population and wealth agricultural labour becomes less and less proportionably productive. And he inferred that the share of the produce of land taken by the landlord and by the labourer must constantly increase, and the share taken by the capitalist diminish.

"This was a logical inference, and would consequently have been true in fact, if the assumed premises had been true. The fact is, however, that almost every one of them is false."—Edin. Rev., lxxxviii. 302. review of J. S. Mill on Political Economy

"His book is the true manual of the demagogue,—seeking power by means of agrarianism, war, and plunder. Its lessons being inconsistent with those afforded by the study of all well-observed facts, and inconsistent even with themselves, the sooner they shall come to be discarded the better will it be for the interests of landlord and tenant, manufacturer and mechanic, and mankind at large."—*H. "His speaking, his conduct, his manner, were all unexceptionable, and all suited to the man,—his high station among philosophers, his known opinions on political affairs, his kindly nature, and his genuine modesty. There was something about him, chiefly a want of all affectation as well as pretension in every thing he said or did, that won the respect of each party. His matter was ever of high value. Whether you agreed or differed with him, you were well pleased to have it brought out and made to bear upon the question, if indeed the pursuit of right and truth was your object. His views were often, indeed, abundantly theoretical, sometimes too refined for his audience, occasionally extravagant, from his propensity to follow a right principle into all its consequences, without duly taking into account in practice the condition of things to which he was applying it: as if a mechanic were to construct an engine without taking into consideration the resistance of the air in which it was to work, or the strength and the weight and the friction of the parts of which it was to be made. But while such were his errors, and those of a kind to excite very strong feelings in certain large and important classes in the House of Commons, he was uniformly and universally respected for the sterling qualities of his capacity and his character, which were acknowledged by all."—LORD BROUGHAM States Time Geo III., ii. 169, 170

"The name of Ricardo, which I shall ever honour, and which I cannot now pronounce without emotion"—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Speech on the Recog. of the Span. Amer. States, 1824 Works, ed. 1854, iii. 438.

"The brevity with which Mr. Ricardo has stated some of his most important principles," remarks one of the most eminent of his disciples, "their intimate dependence on each other, the fewness of his illustrations, and the mathematical cast he has given to his reasoning, render it sometimes not a little difficult for readers unaccustomed to such investigations readily to follow him. But those who give to his works the attention of which they are so worthy, will find that he is remarkably consistent in the use of terms, and that he is as logical and conclusive as he is profound and original. It was the opinion of Quintilian that the students of a language who were delighted with Cicero had made no inconsiderable progress in their art, and the same may without hesitation be said of the students of political economy who find pleasure in the works of Ricardo. Sciat se non parum profecisse cui Ricardo valde placebat."—J. R. McCULLOCH Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1846, 17

But this enthusiasm is by no means participated in by some others of Ricardo's commentators, and to a number of these we have already directed our reader's attention.

It is difficult to dismiss, even for a brief period, the subject of political economy, without the expression of a hope that the Statistical Library, numbering about 6000 volumes, of Baron von Reden, of Vienna, (1804–1857,) some time since offered in the market, will be preserved unbroken, and secured for some public institution in England or America.

"I think, if boasting were lawful, Scotland might boast of Riccalton, not less than of Hume, Robertson, and Blair. He was certainly a man of a strong, comprehensive mind, and if not an elegant, he was a masterly, writer. His metaphysics are, I think, a good besom to sweep away the fine-spun cobweb skeptical metaphysics which at present are too much in fashion in both kingdoms."—Rev. John Newton Letters

See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1853, i. 368, (by P. Cunningham), and ii. 364, (by A. B. G.) This writer thinks that Riccalton's works (supra) were not edited by Walker, but by the author's son and successor at Hobbirk. When are we to have the new edition of Riccalton's Works, with a Memoir, promised by the Rev. J. B. Johnston, of Wolflee, Hawick, Scotland, in 1853?

"Everybody must feel that we do not understand the Ancients unless we frame distinct notions of such objects of their every-day life as we have in common with them under the forms their eyes were accustomed to, and that we should go totally astray if, on reading of a Roman house, a Roman ship, Roman agriculture and trade, Roman dress, or the interior of a household in ancient Rome, we conceived the same notions which answer to those words in our own days."—Niebuhr's Introductory Lecture on Roman History

Of the nearly 2000 wood-cuts, all but 50 are from classical originals, and one-half of these latter are from Egyptian antiquities. Rich, Claudius James, 1787-1821, a native of the vicinity of Dijon, Burgundy, but carried to Bristol, England, in his infancy, obtained a wide reputation before his 15th year for his remarkable attainments in Oriental languages. In 1803 he was appointed a cadet in the E. I. Company's service, and shortly afterwards was presented with a writership in the Bombay establishment. He arrived at Bombay September 1, 1807, soon acquired the esteem of his host, Sir James Mackintosh, and the affections of his eldest daughter, and became the son-in-law of the former and husband of the latter on the 22d of the ensuing January. His success with father and daughter is readily accounted for by the following lines from a letter of Sir James's, written shortly after the marriage:

"He far surpassed our expectations, and we soon considered his wonderful Oriental attainments as the least part of his merit. I found him a fair classical scholar, and capable of speaking and writing French and Italian like the best-educated native. With the strongest recommendations of appearance and manner, he joined every elegant accomplishment and every manly exercise, and combined with them spirit, pleasantry and feeling. His talents and attainments delighted me so much that I resolved to make him a philosopher."—Life of Sir James Mackintosh, i. chap. viii.

But the library was occasionally forsaken for the drawing-room, or perhaps rambles by the shores of Colabba, and, as we have seen, the philosopher became a lover.

In the year of his marriage he was appointed the E. I. Company's Resident at Baghdad, and held this post until 1813, (visiting the ruins of Babylon in 1811,) when his failing health made a change of scene indispensable. From this date until his death he was principally occupied in travelling in Asia, and collected that valuable mass of information respecting Oriental antiquities which has proved so useful in guiding the late researches of Layard, Rawlinson, Botta, and other contributors to this department of knowledge. He died at Shiraz, of the cholera morbus, October 5, 1821, in his 35th year.

"Mr. Rich, whose early death so soon blasted the hopes, not only of his afflicted family, but of the whole literary world"—LORD JEFFREY's Edin. Rev., Oct. 1836, and in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 962. See, also, Life and Correspondence of John Foster.

Mr. Rich gained honourable and permanent distinction by the following publications: 1. Memoir on the Ruins of Babylon, Lon., 1815, 8vo, pp. 71, 2d ed., 1816, 8vo; 3d ed., 1818, 8vo, pp. 67. See, also, Nos. 2, 4.

"The novelty of the ground travelled over the talents and facility of the describer, and the minute accuracy with which the traits of character and local scenery are detailed, render this a work of great value."—Asiatic Journal.

"The careful account which he drew up of the site of the ruins is of great value, and has formed the groundwork of all subsequent inquiries into the topography of Babylon."—Layard's Nimrod.

Rich, Obadiah, 1783–1850, a native of Boston, Mass., whilst residing for some years in Spain, as American consul, formed a most valuable collection of rare books and manuscripts, chiefly relating to the discovery, early settlement, and infant history of America, and with this stock established himself in London, where his bibliographical zeal and scholarship were continually put into requisition for the benefit of authors and other collectors. He found time, however, for the compilation of the following valuable catalogues, which, even at their present high prices, must find a place on the shelves of the bibliographer and historical student.

1. A Catalogue of Books relating principally to America, arranged under the Years in which they were printed, (1500–1700,) Lon., 1832, 8vo, pp. 129, 486 numbers. To some copies he added, A List of Books relating to America, 1493 to 1700, 16 pp. 8vo, which was afterwards reprinted in 4to, double columns, 4 pp. It is since anno. There was also a second Supplement, 8 pp. 8vo. The three preceding were reprinted in 1846, with a small addition, under a new title and as the germ of a new work: see No. 6. The two Supplements, with the Prospectus of the Bibliotheca Americana Vetus, were also printed as a Supplement to No. 4. 2. Catalogue of Miscellaneous Books in all Languages, Lon., 1844, cvo. A Specimen of No. 3 is appended. 3. Bibliotheca Americana; or, A Catalogue of Books in Various Languages, relating to America, printed since the Year 1700: Compiled principally from the Works themselves, Lon. and New York, 1835, 8vo, pp. 424. 250 copies printed. Supplement to the Bibliotheca Americana Nova: Part I, Additions and Corrections, Lon., 1841, 8vo, pp. 425–517. Pp. 509–517 are occupied by an Index to pp. 1–508. This work, 517 pp., with a new title-page, (dated 1846,) is vol. 1. of—4. Bibliotheca Americana Nova: A Catalogue of Books relating to America, in Various Languages, including Voyages to the Pacific and round the World, and Collections of Voyages and Travels, printed since the Year 1700: Compiled principally from the Works themselves, 1846, 2 vols. 8vo: vol. 1., 1701–1800, pp. in all 517, ut supra, No. 3, vol. ii., 1801–1844, pp. 412. Pp. 397–412 are occupied by an Index to pp. 1–396. The author had in course of preparation a Supplement of Omissions, Corrections, and Additions, with a complete General Index to the whole work, (see his notice prefixed to vol. ii.) but it never saw the light. Some copies after p. 412 contain the prospectus of a Bibliotheca Americana Vetus, including the former list of books, 1493–1700, presented in the two Supplements, 16 pp. and 8 pp., to No. 1. 5. A Catalogue of Works relating to America, 1837, 8vo, pp. 40. 6. Bibliotheca Americana Vetus: A Catalogue of Books relating to America, with two Supplements, 1493–1700, pp. 130, 16, and 8. A reprint, with a small addition, of No. 1, (q. v.) The Bibliotheca Americana Vetus, of which we have the prospectus above, was ready for publication, but the MS., having been accidentally left in a hackney-coach, was sold as waste paper to a butcher at Gravesend, in the vicinity of Mr. Rich's residence, from whom only a few sheets were rescued. A portion of the contents, however, will be found in—6. Part I of Rich and Son's Catalogue for 1848, containing near Two Thousand Books relating principally to America.

"Mr Rich's Catalogues are deservedly cherished by all who feel interested in tracing the rise and progress of the New World since its first discovery by Columbus in 1492."—Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., Introduct., xiv–xvii, q. v. for a fuller notice of these Catalogues. See, also, p. 6.

"All of Rich's Catalogues are important, and eagerly sought for by book-collectors, especially the earlier ones, which have come to be exceedingly scarce. Copies of the four volumes above described [Nos. 1, 3, and Supp. to 3 and 4] have recently been sold in New York for $50."—Gould's Librarian's Manual, 1858, 60.

See, also, p. 59 for a notice of the collection of a Providence merchant which contains many works unnoticed by Rich and Ternaux. A review of Ternaux's Publications on American History, by A. Young, will be found in N. American Review, July, 1837, 222–230, in which see p. 224 for a notice of No. 1, supra. The date just cited may remind the collector of Antiquitates Americane, sive Scriptores Septentrionales Rerum Antecolumbianum in America, ed. C. C. Rafn, (65 sheets, with 18 engravings), 1837, imp. 4to,—but whither do we tend? The theme—a Catalogue Raisonné of Books on America—is a tempting one, but we have neither time nor space for its treatment. The collector must wait for the happy day that witnesses the publication of Henry Stevens's Bibliographia Americana; or, A Bibliographical Account of the Sources of Early American History, &c.; or for the completion of Mr. Winthrop Sargent (of Philadelphia)'s Catalogue of Books on America. (We venture to guess at a title.) In the mean time, let him console himself with our friend Mr. Trübner's Bibliographical Prolegomena (and the works there indicated) prefixed to his Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, London, 1859, 8vo. See, also, N. Amer. Review, vols. i., ii., iii., iv., vi., for articles on Books relating to America. But, having for the convenience of the bibliographer arranged Mr. Rich's manuals in chronological order, we must now retrace our steps to add that he also published—7. A General View of the United States of America; with an Appendix, 1833, sm. 8vo, pp. 278. Anon. 2d ed., with Additions, and name of the author, 1838, 8vo.

"Compiled from the Encyclopædia Americana and American Almanac, spoken of with much greater praise than it deserved in many English periodicals."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 247.

See, also, Lon. Athen., 1833, and other English periodicals of this year.

The reader may remember (vide p. 936, supra) that we introduced him to Mr. Rich's attractive library at Madrid in the winter of 1825–26, (from 1833 until shortly before his death he was United States Consul for Port Mahon;) Mr. Irving, whose testimony to the value of the collection and the hospitality of the owner we then cited, subsequently addressed us a letter on the same pleasing theme, an extract from which will gratify our reader:

"He was one of the most indefatigable, intelligent, and successful bibliographers in Europe. His house at Madrid was a literary wilderness, abounding with curious works and rare editions, in the midst of which he lived and moved and had his being, and in the midst of which I passed many months while employed upon my work. . . . He was withal a man of great truthfulness and simplicity of character, of an amiable and obliging disposition and strict integrity."—Washington Irving to S. Austin Albion, Esq., Sunnyside, Sept. 17, 1857.

See, also, Irving's Columbus, (Works, ed. 1848-50,) vol. 1, Pref., xiv.; iii. 333, 430, his Conquest of Granada, Pref., xvii.; his Life and Letters, 1862-64, 4 vols.; and his Letters in C. R. Leslie's Autobiog. Recollec., 1860; Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 209.

"My brother [Alexander H. Everett] entertained the highest respect for him, founded on personal intercourse in Spain. . . . I fully concur in all that Mr. Prescott has so well said of him."—Edward Everett to S. Austin Albion, Esq., Medford, Mass., Oct. 2, 1857.

From Mr. Prescott's letter, referred to by Mr. Everett, we regret that our space permits but a few lines only:

"In short, I may truly say, after an intercourse [by correspondence] with him for thirty years, that I have never known any one who, within the range that I have mentioned, [works relating to N. and S. America, and Castilian history and literature generally,] was to be compared with him, and when to this we add his uncommon industry, enterprise, and integrity, we must feel that it will be very long before we shall see his like again."—William H. Prescott to James M. Rich, Esq., Lynn, Mass., Aug. 28, 1857.

Other complimentary notices of Mr. Rich, by the same eminent authority, will be found in his Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, vol. 1., Pref., vi.; Mexico, 23d ed., 1855, ii. 99; Peru, ed. 1855, vol. 1., Pref., ix., p. 179; Philip II., ed. 1856, i. 311, (where note the compliment to Mr. Rich's sons and successors;) and in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 29, 1829, 314, n. See, also, Prescott, WILLIAM HICKLING, LL.D. (supra.) We quote a few lines from each of several private letters before us:

"In all the relations I had with him,—and they were not only various, both for myself and others, but extended over a period of nearly or quite forty years,—nobody could have been more absolutely kind and admirable than he was."—George Ticknor to James M. Rich, Esq., Boston, October 31, 1857.

See, also, Mr. Ticknor's Pref. to his excellent History of Spanish Literature, ed. 1854, vol. 1., Pref., viii. Mr. Longfellow, who knew Mr. Rich in Spain in the poet's youthful days, (we quote from a letter of the latter before us to James M. Rich, Esq., son of Mr. O. Rich, dated Dec. 8, 1857,) also testifies to the bibliographer's "kindness and readiness in serving others."

"Of his labors on American Bibliography I have the highest esteem, in common with every one whom I know who makes a pursuit of the study of American History. His catalogues are invaluable."—George Bancroft to James M. Rich, Esq., N. York, Nov. 9, 1857.

See other recognitions of Mr. Rich's services to American Bibliography, in London Athenæum, January 26, 1850, 102, (copied in Lon. Gent. Mag., March, 1850, 327); Trübner's *Bibl. Guide to Amer. We need hardly add that all of Mr. Rich's Sale Catalogues,—Manuscripts relating to America, 1827; A Collection of Manuscripts, principally Spanish, relating to America, 18mo, &c.,—and those of Messrs. Rich, should be secured for the bibliographical shelves of the library.

Rich, R. News from Virginia: the Lost Flocke Triumphant, &c., Lon., 1610. Lord Charlemont, 128, 1865, £63.

"In verse, and of excessive rarity, if not unique. To the collectors of American literature and old English poetry, this is a precious little volume; while the notices of the 'Bermouth-awes' render it of interest to the Shakespearian student. The name of R. Rich is new to poetical bibliographers."—Charlemont's Cat., ut supra.

Let us pause a moment to drop a tear over the melancholy fate of the library of the late Earl of Charlemont,—rich in early English and Italian literature, in exquisite specimens of the presses of Caxton, Wynkyn de Worde, Pynson, and their immediate successors, in Irish history and illuminated manuscripts, and in one of the finest copies known of the folio Shakespeare of 1623. The time had at last arrived when these treasures were to be dispersed by auction; but on the 29th of June, 1865, a fire destroyed the premises of Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Fodge, Wellington Street, London, and of 2477 lots of which the Catalogue was composed, only 233 lots, of which some were damaged, appear to have escaped the flames. These 233 were sold at auction, Aug. 11, 1865, for no less than £4100 3s. 6d. See specimens in Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 204. This is, indeed, a sad theme, and one that we would gladly bury in oblivion rather than perpetuate, but that the Muse of History is inexorable in her demand for truth.

"Although he is said to have excelled in writing love-songs, his favourite compositions appear to have belonged to a class more consonant with his own restless disposition. These were termed survances, and were satirical or declamatory personal attacks in verse, arising out of momentary squads or long-cherished animosities. It is difficult to decide whether as a poet he ought to be classed exclusively with the troubadors or with the trouvères."—WRIGHT ubi supra.

The authorship of the Laws of Oleron was once claimed for this monarch, (from the beginning of whose reign dates the time of legal memory,) but this assumption has been disproved.

Richard, Abbot of St. Victor, a native of Scotland, d. 1173, was the author of many treatises on subjects of practical divinity and biblical criticism, which are moderately praised by Dupin. They were pub. collectively, Paris, 1518 and 1540, 2 vols. fol.; Venice, 1592, Cologne, 1621; Rouen, 1650, 2 vols. fol. best ed. See Mackenzie's Scotch Writers; Cave, Dupin; Diet. Richard Anglicanus, an English physician, who flourished about 1230, wrote a number of works recorded by Tanner, none of which have been published. Some of his MSS. are in the New College Library, Oxford. See Leland, Bale; Pitts; Tanner.

Richard, sometimes called Armachanus, and sometimes Fitz-Ralph, Chancellor of Lincoln, 1334, Archdeacon of Chester, 1336, Dean of Lichfield, 1337; Archbishop of Armagh; d. 1360, at Avignon, is said by Bale to have translated the New Testament, by Fox the whole Bible, into Irish. Archbishop Usher says that there were several fragments of this translation in Ireland in his time. He left several MSS. His published works are: 1. Defensio Curatorum adversus Fratros Mendicantes, Paris, 1496. 2. Sermones Quatuor ad Crucem, Londinensem, etc., 1612. Richard de Bury, alias Robertus Holcot, the son of Sir Richard Aungerville, b. at St. Edmundsbury, Suffolk, 1291, (not 1287,) educated at Oxford, was made Bishop of Durham, 1333, High Chancellor of England, 1334, Treasurer of England, 1336, co-ambassador to France twice, in 1338, d. 1345. He was one of the most learned men of his age, and encouraged learning in others,—though Bishop Godwin (Cat. of the Bishops of England, 1601, 4to) was not able to find that he had made a foundation at Oxford, as has been asserted: it is certain, however, that he devised his books to a company of scholars at Oxford, and that they were deposited in a hall which once occupied the site of Durham (now Trinity) College. I. Philobiblon de Amore Librorum, Cologne, 1473, 4to. Editio princeps.—liber rarissimus: 48 leaves of 28 lines Williams, £6 10s. Inglis, who gave it to Thomas Rodd, who pub. it,) Lon., 1832, 8vo.

As an American, the author of this Dictionary is glad to register Philobiblon, A Treatise on the Love of Books, by Richard de Bury, Bishop of Durham, and Lord Chancellor of England First American Edition, with the literal English Translation of John B. Inglis, Collated and Corrected, with Notes, by Samuel Hild, Albany, Joel Munsel, MDCCCLXI., pp. vii, 252, 12mo, 230 copies, and 1 p., 8vo, 30 copies. Mr Edw. R. Poole (q. v.) meditated and partially prepared an English translation, illustrated by notes and various readings.

MSS of this treatise on bibliography, completed Jan. 24, 1344-5, and the first by an English writer, may be seen in several of the libraries of Oxford and Cambridge. It is divided into twenty chapters, "written in very indifferent Latin and a declamatory style." (Biog. Brit.) It has been supposed by some that Philobiblon or Philobiblion (for both titles are used) was really the production of one of Richard de Bury's chaplains, Robert Holcot, a Dominican monk, (see Leland, Itin., in 61, and Hearne's Notes on Leland's Collier, vol. i. 249), to whom, and to Richard, also, are ascribed. 2. Richard de Bury is one of the most illustrious of ancient Englishmen, and should be had in special honour by all lovers of learning.

"Richard de Bury, otherwise called Richard Angervylle, is said to have alone possessed more books than all the bishops of England together. Besides the fixed libraries which he had formed in his several palaces, the floor of his common apartment was so covered with books that those who entered could not with due reverence approach his presence. Gul. Chambræ, Contin. Hist. Dunelm., apud Whart. Angl. Sacr., i. 705. He kept binders, illuminators, and writers in his palaces. 'Antiquarium, scriptorum, correctorum, colligatum, illuminatum,' &c. Philobibl., cap. viii. p. 34, edit. 1599. Petrarch says that he had once a conversation with Angervylle concerning the Island Thule, whom he calls Virum ardentis ingenii. Petrarch, Epist. i. 3."—Walton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, i. cxv.-xvi.

"He [Richard] saith of himself, 'exaltatio quodam librorum amore potenter se abieptum,'—that he was mightily carried away, and even beside himself, with immoderate love of books and desire of reading. He had always in his house many chaplains, all great scholars. His manner was, at dinner and supper time, to have some good books read unto him, whereof he would discourse with his chaplains a great part of the day following; if business interrupted not his course. He was very bountiful unto the poor," &c.—Godwin's Cat of the Bishops of Eng., ed. 1801, 624.

Richard of Cirencester, or Ricardus Corinensis, (sometimes called The Monk of Westminster,) so named from his birthplace, entered the Benedictine monastery of St. Peter's, Westminster, in 1350, visited Rome somewhere between 1391 and 1397, was confined in the infirmary of his abbey by sickness in 1401, and died in 1401 or 1402. 1. Historia ab Hengista ad Ann.

1348; two parts. Part First only, containing the period from the coming of the Saxons to the death of Harold, was published.

"The hope of meeting with discoveries as great in the Roman, British, and Saxon history as he has given us concerning the preceding period [vide No. 2, infra] induced me to examine the work. But my expectations were greatly disappointed. The learned scholar and the deep antiquarian I found sunk into an ignorant novice, sometimes the copier of Huntingdon, but generally the transcriber of Geoffrey. Deprived of his Roman guides, Richard showed himself as ignorant and injudicious as any of his illiterate contemporaries about him in Italy."—Rev. JOHN WHITAKER, historian of Manchester.

2. Tractatus super Symbolum Majus et Minus. 3. Liber de Officiis Ecclesiasticis. 4. De Situ Britannie. The publication of this work by C. J. Bertram, who professes to have discovered it in 1747, has already been noticed. See BERTRAM, CHARLES. Dr William Stukeley published an account of it, with extracts, under the title of An Account of Richard of Cirencester, Lon., 1757, 4to. In 1809, 8vo, (1 p., r. 8vo,) an edition, edited by H. Hatcher, appeared, under the title of The Description of Britain, translated from Richard of Cirencester: with the original treatise De Situ Britannie, and a Commentary on the Itinerary. This is illustrated with two maps; and a fac-simile of the MS Situ Britannie was also printed (the Latin text added) in the same volume with Richard of Devizes's Chronicles concerning the Deeds of Richard I., trans. and edited by J. A. Giles, LL.D., 1841, 8vo, and the Latin text will be found in Dr J. A. Giles's History of the Ancient Britons, (1817, 2 vols., 8vo,) vol. ii. 380. Lastly, the treatise was pub. in the vol. entitled Six Old English Chronicles, of which two are now first translated from the Monkish Latin Originals—Ethelwerd's Chronicle, Asser's Life of Alfred, Geoffrey of Monmouth's British History, Gildas, Nennius, and Richard of Cirencester, Edited, with Notes, by J. A. Giles, LL.D., 1848, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Antiq. Lib. iv.) A critic in The Archaeological Misc., 1852, asserts that the edition of Richard of Cirencester in this volume is, in fact, a reprint of Hatcher's edition of 1809, but without the notes which illustrate it, and without the concordance between Richard and Antoninus which Hatcher gives. See Mr. Wex's Dissertation on Richard of Cirencester, in Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1846, 365; A Renewed Examination of Richard of Cirencester, ibid., March, 1853, 270-273, (by Arthur Hussey,) Richard of Cirencester, ibid., April, 1853, 392, (by G. M.), Richard of Cirencester, ibid., July, 1853, 48-49, (by Arthur Hussey.) G. M. (supra) informs us that Sir Richard Colt Hoare, an eminent authority, assured him that he had no doubt of

"the Itinerary of Richard of Cirencester being an original work, and added that he had tested it in a remarkable manner."

Bertram says that the MS "came into his hands in a very extraordinary manner with many other curiosities." It was hoped that it would be found in an ordinary manner, by an examination of the archives of the Royal Library at Copenhagen, but it has never been discovered.

Gibbon says, "Though it may not seem probable he [Richard] wrote from the MSS of a Roman general, he shows a genuine knowledge of antiquity, very extraordinary for a monk of the fourteenth century."—Decline and Fall, chap. xxi., n. See, also, chap. xxv., n.

The result of the investigations of Mr. Hussey (ubi supra) is, he tells us, an entire incredulity respecting the authenticity of the "so-called Richard of Cirencester's work." (Gent. Mag., March, 1853, 273.)

Richard of Devizes, a monk of the priory of St. Swithun, at Winchester, wrote a history of the first years of the reign of Richard I., 1189-1192: Chronicon Ricardi Divisiensis de Rebus gestis Ricardi Primi Regis Angliæ; Nunc primum typis mandatum, curante Josepho Stevenson, Londini, 1838, 8vo, (Eng. Hist. Soc.) Translation: *The Chronicle of Richard of Devizes concerning the Deeds of Richard the First, King of England; Also, Richard of Cirencester's Description of Britain; Translated and Edited by J. A. "The chronicle of Richard of Devizes is one of the earliest and most authentic memorials of the period to which it relates; but it is written in an affected style, filled with passages from the classic writers."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 361.

Richard and John of Hexham, Northumberland, the first made prior of his house, 1143, the latter abbot of the same, 1170: Richard compiled a short history of the last two years of the reign of Henry I., and of the more remarkable events of that of Stephen, and a history of the Church of Hexham. Tanner also attributes to him, probably on slender foundation, a history of the reign of Henry II. John of Hexham wrote a continuation of the history of Simeon of Durham, from 1130 to 1154. The other two books attributed to him by Bale—De Signis et Cometis, and Descriptio Belli Scoticæ—are only parts of his continuation of Simeon. Bale also ascribes to Prior John, Conciones aliquot. See their works in Twysden's Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores decem, Lon., 1652, 2 vols. fol.: Richard's coll., 285–308, 309–330; John's coll., 257–282.

"The works of these two writers are of small extent, and have little merit, except so far as they contain some historical notices peculiar to themselves. Their style is that of the ordinary Latin writers of the age in which they lived."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 185

Richardson, Charles, LL D. b. July, 1775, d. Oct. 6, 1865, after some attention to the literature of the law, devoted himself to those philological studies the results of which conferred upon him so wide a reputation. From 1852 until his death he was in receipt of a complimentary Government pension of £75 per annum. His first publication was—I. Illustrations of English Philology, Lon., 1815, 4to, pp. 292; again, with new Preface, 1826. The work consists of five dissertations: I. On the Plan of Johnson's Dictionary, II. Tooke's Diversions of Purley; III. Some Lexicographical Articles of Johnson; IV. Censure of the Supplemental Matter inserted in H. J. Todd's ed. of Johnson's Dictionary, 1814, &c., 4 vols. 4to, V. Replies to Dugald Stewart's Censure of Tooke's Philological Speculations

"We sometimes differ in opinion from Mr. Richardson, but the greater number of his animadversions go to the indication of real and gross blemishes, and we consider his critical details as a great and lasting service rendered to English Philology"—Lon Month Rev., Jan 1817

See, also, Lon. Gent Mag., 1836, Pt. 1, 147; Westm. Rev., xiv. 56-93, Pref. to H. G. Bohn's reprint of Johnson's Dictionary, folio of 1773.

Mr. Richardson now undertook a task of no little magnitude in inception, and of much more formidable dimensions as perfected in design and completed in execution a Dictionary of the English Language for the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, (for which he was to: enrich other lexicographical articles also.) Part I of the Encyclopædia was pub in 1818, and three other parts followed, after which the failure of the publishers caused a suspension of the work until it was taken in hand by Mr. Mawman. In 1835 Mr. Pickering commenced the publication (to be completed in thirty quarto parts) of the (2) New Dictionary of the English Language, as a separate work. The last part was issued in 1837, and the work was reissued in a complete shape, with new title-pages, in 1837, and also in 1838 and in 1839: each time in 2 vols. 4to, £5 5s.

The numbers were reprinted in New York as fast as they appeared in England, and in January, 1837, the American publisher remarks, in an address to the public,

"A large edition of the first numbers was quickly exhausted; a second was produced; and before the ninth number became current, a third edition became necessary, which has subsequently been put through the press, and is again nearly exhausted."

Of ninety-four American critical notices of the work he alleges that all but two are favourable; and these two he doubts not were written by uncompromising advocates of the Dictionary of Noah Webster. See Lon. Athen., Feb. 11, 1837, 107. The work was also reissued in London in 1844, 2 vols. 4to; 1849, 2 vols. 4to; 1855, 2 vols. 4to; 1856, and also 1859, with Supplement, pp. 125, 2 vols. 4to, £4 14s. 6d.; Supplement separately, 12s.; 1863-64, 2 vols. 4to, £4 14s. 6d.; Supplement separately, 12s. The Supplement added to either of the previous editions makes it complete. Abridged edition of the Dictionary, the Explanations and Etymologies being retained in full, but the Quotations omitted, 1838, 8vo; 1844, 8vo; 1849, 8vo; 1855, 8vo; 1856, 8vo, 15s. Copies for the American market from the English plates were issued, N. York, 1840, 2 vols. 4to, Phila., 1846, 2 vols. 4to; 1848, 2 vols. 4to, $15; N. York, 1850, 2 vols. 4to.

In this great work,

I. The Words—with those of the same family—are arranged under the several roots, as in Stephens's Thesaurus Lingue Græcæ,—showing at a glance their affinities in German, Dutch, Swedish, Italian, French, Spanish, &c.

II. The Explanations are deduced from the Primitive Meaning through the various Usages.

III. The Quotations are arranged Chronologically, from the earliest period to the beginning of the 19th century.

But the student must peruse the author's own exposition of the character of his work in the Preface to the Dictionary, nor must he omit to consult Dr Richardson's articles on the same subject in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1836, i. 45, 372, 590, (see, also, 146), and ii. 22; 1840, i. 152. (An answer to censures by R. Taylor in his edits. of Tooke's Diversions of Purley, 1829, 8vo, 1840, 8vo, see, also, ed. of 1857, 8vo, additional note, p. liii.)

These read, he should next refer to the following commendatory notices of the Dictionary: Pref. to Encyc. Metropol., 1845, (by Rev H. J. Rose,) Trench on the Study of Words, 211; *Lon. Quar. Bohn's reprint of Johnson's Dict., folio of 1773, iv.-xi.; Pref. to Bartlett's Dict. of Americanisms, ed. 1848, Pref. to Worcester's Dict., 4to, 1846, lxxv.; and Pref. to his new 4to Dict., 1860, Pref., iv. Bohn's reprint of Johnson's folio of 1773 treats Richardson's Dictionary with little respect:

"He gives what he conceives the primary word, and its derivatives under it. This plan, easy and natural in Hebrew, where the roots are with few exceptions traceable not only without difficulty, but by a few general and undeviating rules, is puzzling even in Greek, it has not been successfully attempted in Latin, in English it is hopeless. It produces nothing but confusion. He gives us etymological essays (generally at second hand, and from the most obvious sources) and examples industriously selected, though so arranged as to afford but little information with respect to the secondary words. As a lexicon, his work is nearly useless. In other respects it may be valuable, but it has slight claims on the score of a Dictionary."—p. iv

We quote a few words in commendation of the lexicographer's labours:

"Richardson's admirable addition to our lexicography, his 'New Dictionary of the English Language,' new, indeed, and supplying a great desideratum,—as exhibiting the biography of each word, its birth, parentage, and education, the changes that have befallen it, the company it has kept, and the connexions it has formed, by a rich series of citations—all in chronological order."—Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1847, lxxix. 351, n.

"Richardson, in his admirable Dictionary."—CHARLES KNIGHT: Pictorial Shakesp., 2d ed. 1867, v. 293, n.

"In most cases, Richardson's Dictionary—the only one from which I can promise you effectual help, for it is the only English one in which etymology assumes the dignity of a science—will put you in the right position for judging why the word has been suggested to you."—DEAN TRENCH On the Study of Words, p. 211.

"The best Dictionary in the language"—DEAN TRENCH, Lon. Athen., 1855, 815.

"In conclusion, I would recommend your correspondent to consult that inestimably valuable book, 'Dr Richardson's Dictionary,' where he may satisfy his doubts on this occasion, as well as all others which may arise of a like kind. It is a book which no Englishman [nor American: S. A. A.] who loves his noble native tongue should be without; and it will be beneficial to countless millions in ages yet to come."—S. W. STRONG: in Notes and Queries.

The quotation from Dean Trench will naturally remind the reader not only of this gentleman's excellent philological treatises, but especially of the good work in which he is now so zealously engaged: see Proposal for the Publication of a New English Dictionary, by the Philological Society, Lon., 1859, 8vo, pp. 31. We need hardly add that the student of languages must have on his shelves the Proceedings of the Philological Society, 1842-53, 6 vols. 8vo, £3, (pub. at twelve guineas,) and the Philological Society's Transactions, 1854-60, 7 vols. 8vo, £7 7s.

As regards Richardson's great work, that which cost the author more than twenty years of labour to make, and the publishers upwards of £6000 to print, is cheaply purchased even at the English price of £4 14s. 6s., to which price (with the Supplement added) we have seen it is now reduced. How cheap it can be had in America we are ashamed, as an American, to admit. Our estimate of the value of the work is exactly that of the learned author:

"It is a copious and careful record of the Language from its earliest state, it contains the choicest sentiments of English wisdom, poetry, and eloquence, it may be deemed a suppliant of many books."—Pref. to Dict., sect. iii, last page, April, 1837

He who saves the price of the work exercises an unprofitable economy, and we may apply to him and the book he refuses what Fox remarks of the wiseacre who should resolve to find his way through the early and middle ages without the aid of the author of the Decline and Fall

"If any man were to say, 'I don't like his history, I will acquire the information another way,' he would find it a very hard task."—Recollec. of S. Rogers (Charles James Fox, Lon., 1859, 39)

3. On the Study of Language an Exposition of Tooke's Diversions of Purley, 1854, 12mo

"The judicious endeavour of a veteran philologist to extend the philosophical study of language by popularizing Horne Tooke's 'Diversions of Purley' Dr Richardson has done good service to the study of language in this very judicious and compact recast, for the book is much more than an abridgment"—Lon. Spectator

It is in use in Great Britain in preparing for public examinations. Dr. Richardson also published An Historical Essay on English Grammar and English Grammars, another on Fancy and Imagination,—“in which he contravenes the opinions of D Stewart and Mr. Wordsworth, considering it quite unphilosophical to suppose them either different powers or different operations of the mind,”—several philological papers in the Gentleman's Magazine, and some critical comments on Shakspeare.

He married the widow of Mr. Daniel Terry, the actor; and in February, 1860, at the sale of his library, six autograph letters of Sir Walter Scott to Terry were sold at about £2 each.

The Fishes to the Zoology of the Voyage of H.M.S. Samarang, under the Command of Captain Sir Edward Belcher, during the Years 1843-46, 4to, 1848. 8. Fossil Mammals—collected in North-West America—to the Zoology of the Voyage of H.M.S. Herald, under the Command of Captain Henry Kellett, R.N., C.B., during the Years 1841-45, r. 4to, 1852. 9. Notes on the Natural History to The Last of the Arctic Voyages, being a Narrative of the Expedition of H.M.S. Assistance, under the Command of Captain Sir Edward Belcher, C.B., in Search of Sir John Franklin, during the Years 1852-53-54, 2 vols. r. 8vo, 1855. The other contributors to the Appendix are Richard Owen, Lovell Reeve, Thomas Bell, and J. W. Salter. Sir E. Belcher's Narrative has not escaped censure, (see Athen., 1855, 1397;) but the work as a whole has been commended by Athenæum, Spectator, M. Post, Atlas, Press, and Weekly Despatch. The "universal typographical magnificence," noticed by the Edinburgh Review, makes the volumes an ornament to the library of the mere collector, as well as a text-book for the naturalist.

To retrace our steps: whilst residing at the Royal Naval Hospital at Haslar, Sir John took a lively interest in the museum established there by the intelligent seal of Sir Wm Burnett, Inspector-General, and in 1842 he issued the first part of (10) Icones Piscium; or, Pictures of Rare Fishes, imp. 4to; also 1846. Unfortunately, as this was the first, so also it was the last, part published. About eighteen years later Sir John's name appeared in connection with (11) Second Supplement to the First Edition of the History of British Fishes by the late William Yarrell: Being also a First Supplement to the Second Edition; illustrated by Wood-cuts; Edited by Sir John Richardson, C.B., 1860. See Athen., 1860, i. 377; YARRELL, WILLIAM, No. 2. To the Encyclopædia Britannica, 8th ed., he contributed the articles Franklin, Sir John, (see ROGERS, HENRY,) Ichthyology, and Polar Regions, enlarged and published separately, 1861, demy 8vo: see Lon. Athen., 1861, i. 428. Died, June 5, 1865: see Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 707, (Obituary.) The "last, and perhaps not least happy, ten years of his life" were "spent by the shores of pleasant Grasmere." See Life of Sir John Richardson, C.B., LL.D., by the Rev. John McIlraith, 1868, fp. 8vo.

Richardson, Major John, a native of British America, made a prisoner at the battle of the Thames; subsequently served in Spain, resided for several years in Paris, (where he wrote Ecarté;) afterwards removed to Canada, and then to the United States, where he remained until his death, employing his leisure in writing for the press: See N York International Magazine, April, 1851, 37. Ecarté; or, The Saloons of Paris, Lon., 1829, 3 vols. p. 8vo, new ed., about 1851, N. York, 8vo. "Detestable."—Lon. Lit. Gaz. 1829, 208.

2. Wacousta, or, The Prophecy, Lon., 1833, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Also in Waldie's Library, vol. i, 1833; new ed., about 1851, N. York, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1832, 837. 3. War of 1812, First Series, 1812, Montreal, (?) 1842, 8vo. 4. Eight Years in Canada, Montreal, 1847, 8vo. 5. Matilda Montgomerie, or, The Prophecy Fulfilled, 1851, 8vo. 6. Westbrook, or, The Outlaw, 8vo. 7. Wau-nan-gee, or, The Massacre of Chicago, a Romance, 1852, 8vo. 8. Handscabble, or, The Fall of Chicago, 1856, 8vo. 9. Canadian Brothers. He established a newspaper in Upper Canada.

Richardson, John F., b. at Vernon, N. York, 1808, graduated at Madison University, 1835, and Professor there in 1838, Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in the University of Rochester from 1850 until his death, Feb. 11, 1868. Roman Orthodoxy: a Plea for the Restoration of the True System of Latin Pronunciation, N. York, 1859, 8vo. The London Athenæum (1859, ii. 497) remarks that "it is impossible not to feel some sympathy" with Prof. Richardson, but presents what we deem insufficient reasons against the adoption of his system.

Richardson, John M., has contributed to the Mathematical Monthly, pub. at Cambridge, Mass., (see No. for Nov. 1858,) and perhaps to other scientific publications.

Richardson, Jonathan, 1665?-1745, left the office of a scrivener, to whom he had been apprenticed, for the studio of John Riley, the portrait-painter, where, by devotion to his master's art and his niece, he gained reputation and a wife. After the death of Kneller and Dahl he stood at the head of English portrait-painters, but it is as an art critic rather than as an artist, by his precept rather than his practice, that he is entitled to consideration. It is a curious fact that he was both the father-in-law of Hudson, his successor in the supremacy, and the father-in-art of Hudson's pupil, Sir Joshua Reynolds, whose fondness for painting was first excited by the perusal of Richardson's Essay on the Theory of Painting, (see Johnson's Life of Cowley.) As an author, his name is known in connection with—1. Essay on the Theory of Painting, Lon., 1715, '25, '39, 8vo. See No. 8.

"Neither is it to be supposed that Sir Joshua Reynolds would not have been a painter, and every whit as great a one, had he never seen 'Richardson's Treatise.' He read the treatise with interest, because his mind was naturally turned more towards painting than to any thing else. . . . But, to return to Reynolds and Richardson, it must be admitted that if ever books could infuse a love of art, and an emulation to shine as a painter, into a mind hitherto insensible to such things, Richardson's discourses would be the most likely to do so."—C. R. LEBLIE. Autobiog. Recollec., 1860, ch. vii.

2. Two Discourses on the Art of Criticism as it relates to Painting and the Science of a Connoisseur, 1719, 8vo. See No. 8. 3. With RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, JR., An Account of some of the Statues, Bas-Reliefs, Drawings, and Pictures in Italy, France, &c., with Remarks, 1722, '54, 8vo. The son (see RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, JR.) made the Journey on the Continent, and on his return the father and son compiled this valuable work. 4. Traité de la Peinture et de la Sculpture, Amst., 1723, 3 vols. 8vo. 5. With RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, JR., Explanatory Notes and Remarks on Milton's Paradise Lost, with a Life of the Author, and a Discourse on the Poem, by J. R., Sen., 1734, 8vo; With a Portrait of Milton, etched by Richardson the Father. See MILTON, JOHN, p. 1299, col. 1, supra. A remark in this work elicited a caricature by Hogarth, which, however, was suppressed by its author.

"There are strange inequalities in Richardson's Notes; often better sense than grammar or English, he sometimes hits the true meaning of the author surprisingly, and explains it properly. His son is a man of taste and literature, as well as benevolence and good nature."—BISHOP NEWTON.

"Judge of my astonishment, when, in this portrait of Milton, I saw a likeness, nearly perfect, of Wordsworth, better by much than any which I have since seen of those expressly painted for himself."—De Quincey's Lit. Remins., Bost., 1861, 264-268, q. v. for an interesting account of this authentic portrait, for the sake of which the collector will have to pay a high price for the volume.

6. Works, corrected and prepared for the Press by his Son, J. Richardson, Jr., 1773, 8vo. 7. Morning Thoughts, or, Poetical Meditations, &c., with Notes by his Son, 1776 8vo. Said to be "not greatly inspired by the Muse."

"A whole volume of Richardson's poetry has been published since my volume (Anecdotes of Painters) was printed: not much to the honour of his muse, but exceedingly so to that of his piety and amiable heart."—Fraser's Walpole to Sir D. Dalrymple, Dec. 11, 1780. Lettres, ed. 1861, vii. 472.

8. Works on Painting, intended as a Supplement to Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting, 1792, 4to. Contains Nos. 1 and 2, with portraits of Sir J. Reynolds, (to whom the volume is dedicated,) Raffaele, Correggio, Rubens, G. Romano, Vandyke, N. Poussin, Cortona, L. Da Vinci, Holbein, Giordano, and Rembrandt.

Respecting this amiable man and excellent critic, see Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting. Nichols's Lit. Anec., Index, vol. vii. 351, Nichols's Illustr., ii. 32, 81.

Richardson, Jonathan, Jr., 1694-1771, son of the preceding, and an amateur painter, in addition to the works partly composed and edited by him, already noticed,—see RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, Nos. 3, 5, 6, and 7,—was the author of a collection pub. five years after his death, entitled Richardsoniana, or, Occasional Reflections on the Moral Nature of Man; suggested by Various Authors, Ancient and Modern, and exemplified from those Authors, with several Anecdotes interspersed, by the late Jonathan Richardson, Jun., Esq., Lon., 1776, 8vo. To this volume—very well worth possessing—we have already referred in our lives of John Milton, p. 1299, col. 1, supra, and Alexander Pope, supra. Richardson, Samuel, 1689-1761, a native of Derbyshire, the son of a joiner, at a very early age gave evidence of those powers of composition by the exercise of which he gained, in later life, the title of "The inventor of the English novel." After delighting his companions at the village grammar-school (the only "university" which he ever entered) with extemporaneous romances, he would turn his attention to another circle of admirers, which we shall let him describe in his own words:

"As a bashful and not forward boy, I was an early favourite with all the young women of taste and reading in the neighbourhood. Half a dozen of them, when met to work with their needles, used, when they got a book they liked, and thought I should, to borrow me to read to them, their mothers sometimes with them, and both mothers and daughters used to be pleased with the observations they put me upon making.

"I was not more than thirteen, when three of these young women, having an high opinion of my taciturnity, revealed to me their love-secrets, in order to induce me to give them copies to write after, or correct, for answers to their lovers' letters; nor did any of them ever know that I was the secretary of the others. I have been directed to chide, and even repulse, when an offence was either taken or given, at the very time that the heart of the child or repulser was open before me, overflowing with esteem and affection, and the fair repulser, deeming to be taken at her word, directing this word or that expression to be softened or changed. One, highly gratified with her lover's fervour and vows of everlasting love, has said, when I have asked her direction,—'I cannot tell you what to write, but—her heart on her lips—you cannot write too kindly.' All her fear was only lest she should incur slight for her kindness"—Richardson's Life and Correspondence, i., Introd., xxxix, xl

"Human nature"—thus comments Richardson's biographer on the lines just quoted—"is human nature in every class the hopes and the fears, the perplexities and the struggles, of these now-had girls in probably an obscure village, supplied the future author with those ideas which, by their gradual development, produced the character of a Clarissa and a Clementina, nor was he probably happier or amused in a more lively manner, when sitting in his grotto, with a circle of the best-informed women in England about him, who in after-times courted his society, than in reading to these girls in it, may be, a little back-shop, or a mantuamaker's parlour with a brick floor."—MRS BARBAULD ubi supra

Yet neither love of books nor of female admiration unfitted Young Richardson for untrifling application to the interests of his master, John Wilde, a London printer, to whom, at the age of seventeen, he was bound apprentice. Released from his servile though honourable labours in 1713, he toiled six more years as a journeyman and corrector of the press, and at last, in 1719, ventured to set up a printing-office in Fleet Street. Like the famous printer of a later generation, our countryman, Benjamin Franklin, fond of supplying as well as managing the press, he occupied the hours which could be spared from the supervision of his workmen in writing prefaces, and what he calls "honest dedications," for other men's books, and in compiling indexes for the booksellers. His thrift gained customers, and a wife,—the daughter of his old master; his manners made friends, and his integrity and piety secured respect.

His reputation, if not his purse, was extended as the printer of The Daily Journal, and The Daily Gazetteer; the Duke of Wharton engaged him in the same capacity in connection with The Briton, of which Richardson issued six numbers, and by the favour of Mr. Speaker Onslow he printed the first edition—26 volumes—of the Journal of the House of Commons. The last-named friend would fain have given him a place in court; but the printer was wiser than his great friend, and stuck to his type,—from which, indeed, neither increased wealth, literary fame, nor rural attractions could ever entirely divorce him. In 1754 he was chosen Master of the Stationers' Company, and in 1760, only about a year before his death, he purchased a moiety of the patent of law-printer, and carried on that department of business with Miss Catherine Lintot. Yet towards the close of life he was found less frequently at his printing-office than at his country-seat at Parson's Green, where he relieved the annui of an invalid by the triumphs of an author,—delighting himself, and alternately charming and wearying the fair auditors who encircled his chair, by his own compositions sonorously chanted by his own voice. This, indeed, had long been his custom.

"While Clarissa and Sir Charles Grandison were in progress, Richardson used to read a part of his labours to some of this chosen circle every morning, and receive, it may readily be supposed, a liberal tribute of praise, with a very moderate portion of criticism. Miss Highmore, who inherited a paternal taste for painting, has recorded one of those scenes in a small drawing, where Richardson, in a morning cap and gown, is introduced reading the manuscript of Sir Charles Grandison to such a little group. Mrs. Charlotte Lennox was a regular visitor at Parson's Green, and scarce could remember a visit in which her host had not rehearsed at least one, but probably two or three, voluminous letters, if he found her in the humour of listening."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Richardson.

His first wife, Miss Wilde, who died in 1731, left him five sons and a daughter, all of whom he survived. By his second wife, Miss Leake, he had five daughters and a son, and of these, four daughters and their mother outlived him. One of these daughters was the mother of the late Rev. Samuel Crowther, the author of the remark recorded by Bishop Wilson, late of Calcutta, in a note to Crowther's Funeral Sermon, and commented on by Lord Macaulay in his Speech on Talfourd's Bill on Copyright,—"I am an unworthy grandson, never to have read these celebrated works." (See Minor of Parl., Feb. 5, 1841; Lon. Quar. Rev., lix 212, 213.)

We have now to present

Of the minor contributions just noticed, the only one known to most modern readers is The Rambler, No. 97, which is honoured with an ore rotundo introduction by the Great Rambler himself.

"The reader is indebted for this day's entertainment to an author from whom the age has received greater favours, who has enlarged the knowledge of human nature, and taught the passions to move at the command of virtue."

The paper itself we have already had occasion to notice, in our Life of JOHNSON, SAMUEL, p. 973, col., supra. See, also, Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, p. 63, n.

The lexicographer's admiration of Richardson's works is well known: we shall have something on the subject to quote hereafter. In the mean time, the following anecdote will bear repetition.

"John Gilbert Cooper related that soon after the publication of his Dictionary, Garrick, being asked by Johnson what people said of it, told him that, among other animadversions, it was objected that he cited authorities which were beneath the dignity of such a work, and mentioned Richardson. 'Nay,' said Johnson, 'I have done worse than that. I have cited thee, David.'"—Boswell et supra, 656.

II. PAMELA, OR, VIRTUE REWARDED.

Of the earliest compositions of our author we have had the narration in the writer's own words: he shall let us into the secret history of the more ambitious efforts of his maturer years.

"My business, till within these few years, filled all my time. I had no leisure, nor, being unable to write by a regular plan, knew that I had so much invention till I almost accidentally said into the writing of Pamela. And, besides, little did I imagine that any thing I could write would be so kindly received by the world."

And what happy "accident" was it that transformed the comparatively obscure printer into a popular author?

"Two booksellers, my particular friends, [Mr. Rivington and Mr. Osborne], entreated me to write for them a little volume of letters in a common style, on such subjects as might be of use to those country readers who were unable to indite for themselves. 'Would it be any harm,' said I, 'in a piece you want to be written so low, if we should instruct them how they should think and act in common cases as well as indite?' They were the more urgent for me to begin the little volume for this hint I set about it; and, in the progress of it, writing two or three letters [vide No. 8, supra] to instruct handsome girls who were obliged to go out to service, as we phrase it, how to avoid the snares that might be laid against their virtue, the above story recurred to my thought; and hence sprang Pamela."—Richardson's Corresp., Introd. 1

In a letter to another correspondent, Richardson gives a fuller account of the history of this novel, prefaced by the facts upon which he erected his superstructure.

As we have already had occasion to notice, the success of Pamela—said to have been written in less than three months—was unbounded. It was recommended from the pulpit, praised in the coffee-rooms, eulogized at the clubs, and quoted in the parlour. Pope asserted that it would do more good than twenty sermons; an oracular critic of the day declared that, "if all other books were to be burnt, Pamela and the Bible should be preserved," and even at fashionable Ranelagh "it was usual for the ladies to hold up the volumes to one another, to shew that they had got the book that every one was talking of."

This astonishing success induced some unprincipled fellow—we have such in this generation—to publish a continuation of the story, under the title of Pamela in High Life. Richardson was so unwise as to injure his reputation by publishing himself two more volumes of his story.

"These volumes," remarks Mrs. Barbauld, "are, like most second parts, greatly inferior to the first. They are superfluous, for the plan was already completed, and they are dull, for, instead of incident and passion, they are filled with heavy sentiment, in diction far from elegant. A great part of it aims to palliate, by counter-criticism, the faults which had been found in the first parts. It is less a continuation than the author's defence of himself."—Life of Richardson

The name of the author of Pamela in High Life is unknown, but Pamela stirred the genius of another writer, who soon gained, has ever since held, and is likely ever to maintain, a loftier niche in the Temple of Fame than the idol of the town, whose "sentimentalism" was ridiculed in the pages of Joseph Andrews see FIELDING, HENRY, p. 592, supra. But, on the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the famous dramatist founded on the story of Pamela two of his plays, Pamela Nubile and Pamela Martata.

"Pamela . . . made a most powerful sensation on the public. Hitherto romances had been written, generally speaking, in the old French taste, containing the protracted amours of princes and princesses, told in language coldly extravagant and metaphysically absurd. In these wearisome performances there appeared not the most distant allusion to the ordinary tone of feeling, the slightest attempt to paint mankind as it exists in the ordinary walks of life, all was rant and bombast, stilt and buskin. It will be Richardson's eternal praise, did he merit no more, that he tore from his personages those painted vizards, which concealed, under a clumsy and affected disguise, every thing like the natural lineaments of the human countenance, and placed them before us barefaced, in all the actual changes of feature and complexion, and all the light and shade of human passion. It requires a reader to be in some degree acquainted with the huge folios of insanity over which our ancestors yawned themselves to sleep, ere he can estimate the delight they must have experienced from this unexpected return to truth and nature.

"The simplicity of Richardson's tale aided the effect of surprise . . . The judicious criticism of Mrs. Barbauld [Introduction to Richardson's Correspondence] has pointed out that the character of Pamela is far from obtaining a heroic cast of excellence. On the contrary, there is a strain of cold-blooded prudence which runs through all the latter part of the novel, to which we are obliged almost to deny the name of virtue . . . It is, perhaps, invidious to enter too closely upon the general tendency of a work of entertainment. But when the admirers of Pamela challenge for that work the merit of doing more good than twenty sermons, we demur to the motion"—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Life of Richardson.

Another very eminent critic is not disposed to concur with the animadversions of Mrs. Barbauld and the author of Waverley:

"Mrs. Barbauld's objection to the moral of 'Pamela' appears to me over-refined and under-reasoned. His object is to dispose young women of low rank to good conduct, by such motives as will work. The hope of marrying a squire, though rather prostitute, is a powerful inducement. This is a low and homely morality, to be sure, but B. in this place aimed no higher."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH. Life, i. chap. v.

Haslitt's admiration of Pamela and the genius of its author was warmly proclaimed:

"Taking the general idea of the character of a modest and beautiful country girl, and of the ordinary situation in which she is placed, he makes out all the rest, even to the smallest circumstance, by the mere force of a reasoning imagination. It would seem as if a step lost would be as fatal here as in a mathematical demonstration. The development of the character is the most simple, and comes the nearest to nature that it can do, without being the same thing. The interest of the story increases with the dawn of understanding and reflection in the heroine her sentiments gradually expand themselves, like opening flowers."—Lectures on the English Comic Writers, Lect. VI., On the English Novelists. See Lon Athen., 1847, 224.

The following story, which has amused us not a little, proves that Pamela does not lack admirers even in the present generation:

"I recollect an anecdote told me by a late highly respected inhabitant of Windsor, as a fact which he could personally testify to, having occurred in a village [Slough, Bucks] where he resided several years, and where he actually was at the time it took place. The blacksmith of the village had got hold of Richardson's novel of Pamela, or Virtue Rewarded, and used to read it aloud in the long summer evenings, seated on his anvil, and never failed to have a large and attentive audience. It is a pretty long-winded book, but their patience was fully a match for the author's prolixity, and they fairly listened to it all. At length, when the happy turn of fortune arrived which brings the hero and heroine together, and describes them as living long and happily, according to the most approved rules, the congregation were so delighted as to raise a great shout, and, procuring the church keys, actually set the parish bells a-ringing."—SIR JOHN F. W. HERSCHEL. Opening Address to the Subscribers to the Windsor and Eton Public Library. See, also, Blackw Mag., lxiv 460.

III. CLARISSA HARLOWE; OR, THE HISTORY OF A YOUNG LADY.

"The work on which his fame as a classic of England will rest forever. The tale, like that of its predecessor, is very simple; but the scene is laid in a higher rank of life, the characters are drawn with a bolder pencil, and the whole accompaniments are of a far loftier mood. The publication of Clarissa raised the fame of the author to the height. No work had appeared before, perhaps none has appeared since, containing so many direct appeals to the passions, stated, too, in a manner so irresistible. And high as his reputation stood in his own country, it was even more exalted in those of France and Germany, whose imaginations are more easily excited, and their passions more easily moved by tales of fictitious distress, than are the cold blooded English. Foreigners of distinction have been known to visit Hampstead and to inquire for the Fluck-walk, distinguished as a scene in Clarissa's history, just as travellers visit the rocks of Meillerie to view the localities of Rousseau's tale of passion. Diderot vied with Rousseau in heaping incense upon the shrine of the English author. The former compares him to Homer, and predicts for his memory the same honours which are rendered to the Father of epic poetry, and the last, besides his well-known burst of eloquent panegyric, records his opinion in a letter to D'Alembert. 'On n'a jamais fait encore, en quelque langue que ce soit, de roman égal à Clarissa, ni même approchant.'—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Life of Richardson.

"Those deplorably tedious lamentations, 'Clarissa' and 'Sir Charles Grandison,' which are pictures of high life as conceived by a bookseller, and romances as they would be spiritualized by a Methodist teacher. Many English books, I conclude, are to be bought at Paris. I am sure Richardson's works are, for they have stupefied the whole French nation. I will not answer for our best authors."—HORACE WALPOLE. 1766. Letters, ed 1861, iv 305, 396. See, also, 399, 408, 425, 449, v 66, and viii 159.

"The plot, as we have seen, is simple, and no underplots interfere with the main design—no digression, no episodes. It is wonderful that, without those helps of common writers, he could support a work of such length. With Clarissa it begins—with Clarissa it ends. We do not come upon unexpected adventures and wonderful recognitions by quick turns and surprises; we see her fate from afar, as it were, through a long avenue, the gradual approach to which, without ever losing sight of the object, has more of simplicity and grandeur than the most cunning labyrinth that can be contrived by art. . . . As the work advances, the character rises; the distress is deepened, our hearts are torn with pity and indignation; bursts of grief succeed one another, till at length the mind is composed and harmonized with emotions of milder sorrow; we are calmed into resignation, elevated with pious hope, and dismissed glowing with the conscious triumphs of virtue."—MRS BARBAULD. Life of Richardson.

"Mrs. Barbauld's account of the moral of 'Clarissa' is one of the noblest pieces of mitigated and rational Stoicism in the world. . . . I have been reading 'Clarissa Harlowe,' and my frame is so easily disturbed that a few of the most common sentences in the first hundred pages of the first volume have brought tears from me. . . . I have just finished poor 'Clarissa,' and my body is too weak for writing a criticism, even if my mind had power for it. She left her father's house on the 10th of April, and died on the 7th of September. . . . The effect of the death of Clarissa—or of Mary Stuart—on the heart, by no means depends on the fact that she really died, but on the vivacity of the exhibition by the two great painters, Hume and Richardson."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH. Life, i. chap. v., ii. chap. iii., iii.

"Mrs. Barbauld's criticism, we think, is equally judicious and refined"—LORD JEFFREY. Edin Rev., v 30.

"Clarissa is, however, his master-piece, if we except Lovelace. If she is fine in herself, she is still finer in his account of her. . . . I should suppose that never sympathy more deep or sincere was excited then by the heroine of Richardson's romance, except by the calamities of real life. The links in this wonderful chain of interest are not more finely wrought than their whole weight is overwhelming and irresistible. Who can forget the exquisite gradations of her long dying-scene, or the closing of the coffin-lid when Miss Howe comes to take her last leave of her friend, or the heart-breaking reflection that Clarissa makes on what was to have been her wedding-day!"—HARLITT. Lect. on the English Novelists.

"Perhaps the most pathetic tale ever published"—DR. DRAKE. Essays.

But let us not forget Dr. Johnson's tribute:

"The first time I was in company with Dr. Johnson, which was at Miss Cotterel's, I well remember the flattering notice he took of a lady present, on her saying that she was inclined to estimate the morality of every person according as they liked or disliked 'Clarissa Harlowe.' He was a great admirer of Richardson's works in general, but of 'Clarissa' he always spoke with the highest enthusiastic praise. He used to say that it was the first book in the world for the knowledge it displays of the human heart."—Miss Reynolds's Recollections. Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed 1848, r. 8vo, 830.

It will be seen (AYSCOUGH, SAM'L., p. 85, supra) that we have already given an extract from a letter of Johnson's to Richardson respecting a new edition of Clarissa, (see, also, Johnson's Preface to the Life of Rowe, or Rowe, NICHOLAS, No 3, infra;) and it would appear by the following lines in a later letter (26th Sept 1753) that No 6 in the preceding LIST OF RICHARDSON'S PUBLICATIONS was suggested by the lexicographer:

"Cannot I prevail, this time, for an Index? such as I wished, and shall wish, to Clarissa? Suppose that in one volume an accurate index was made to the three works—but while I am writing an objection arises—such an index to the three would look like the conclusion of a fourth, to which I will never contribute, for if I cannot benefit mankind, I hope never to injure them."—BOSWELL ut supra.

Each volume of Sir Charles Grandison is prefaced by an index, and a list of similes and allusions is appended. Malone informs us that the Preface to this volume (No. 6, supra) and the Preface to the first two vols of Clarissa were written by the Rev. William (afterwards Bishop) Warburton.

"This novel may display more talent than Sir Charles Grandison, (though, when I recollect the character of Clementina, I should be disposed to contest even this point,) but it has certainly interested and delighted me less. Till the grand catastrophe we are exasperated to maddening impatience by the incessant and varied persecutions of the helpless heroine."—Gibbon's Diary of a Lover of Lit. Lon Gent. Mag, 1834, i 138 See, also, 1840, i 343, n.

Lord Byron was not only not "interested" in Clarissa, but declared his inability to read it through. On the other hand, the Rev. Martin Sherlock, in his volume of Letters on Several Subjects, published in 1781, declares that Clarissa has not an equal in the universe for wit, sentiment, and sense.

I [Thackeray] spoke to him [Macaulay] once about Clarissa. "Not read Clarissa!" he cried out. "If you have once thoroughly entered on Clarissa, and are infected by it, you can't leave it. When I was in India, I passed one hot season at the hills, and there were the governor-general, and the secretary of government, and the commander-in-chief, and their wives. I had Clarissa with me, and, as soon as they began to read, the whole station was in a passion of excitement about Miss Harlowe and her misfortunes and her scoundrelly Lovelace. The governor's wife seized the book, and the secretary waited for it, and the chief-justice could not read it for tears!" He acted the whole scene, he paced up and down the Athenaeum library; I daresay he could have spoken pages of the book,—of that book, and of what countless piles of others!"—W. M. THACKERAY: Niŋ Nis Bonum Cornhill Mag, No 1, Jan 1860.

"Mr. Serjeant Hill disputing once with a young pupil who contended for the accuracy of Richardson's descriptions of love in 'Clarissa Harlowe,' the learned Serjeant alleged that Richardson was any thing but an accurate man, and, in proof of his assertion, asked the young student if he had read Clarissa's Will; and added, 'You will find there is not one of the uses or trusts in it that can be supported.'"—Ireneau, by Ward. See, also, Letters of the Earl of Dudley to the Bishop of Llandaff, 1840, 2vo.

An abridged and incorrect French version of Clarissa was pub. by Prevost; a more faithful translation, by Le Tourneur, subsequently appeared. It was translated into Dutch by Stunstra, and into German under the auspices of the celebrated Haller.

IV. THE HISTORY OF SIR CHARLES GRANDISON.

Johnson's exceptions to the Preface (see Boswell, ubi supra, 83) are well taken. As regards the work itself, perhaps enough, though not all that was designed, was given to the world.

"Richardson has sent me his 'History of Sir Charles Grandison,' in four volumes octavo, which amuses me. It is too long, and there is too much mere talk in it. Whenever he goes ultra credam, into high life, he grossly mistakes the modes, but, to do him justice, he never mistakes nature, and he has surely great knowledge and skill both in painting and in interesting the heart."—Lord Chesterfield to David Mallett, Nov 5, 1785; Walpole's Letters, ed 1861, iv 308, n.

"The effect of reading this work is like an increase of kindred. You find yourself all of a sudden introduced into the midst of a large family, with aunts and cousins to the third and fourth generation, and grandmothers both by the father's and mother's side; and a very odd set of people they are,—but people whose real existence and personal identity you can no more dispute than your own senses, for you see and hear all that they do or say. What is still more extraordinary, all this extreme elaborateness in working out the story seems to have cost the author nothing; for it is said that the published works are mere abridgements. I have heard (though this I suspect must be a pleasant exaggeration) that Sir Charles Grandison was originally written in eight-and-twenty volumes. Who ever remained insensible to the passion of Lady Clementina, except Sir Charles Grandison himself, who was the object of it?"—HARLITT: Lect. on the English Novelists.

"Sir Charles encounters no misfortunes, and can hardly be said to undergo any trials. The author, in a word, has sent him forth

—VICTORIOUS,
Happy and glorious

... In the living world, a state of trial and a valley of tears, such unspotted worth, such unvarying perfection, is not to be met with, and, what is still more important, it could not, if we suppose it to have existence, be attended by all those favours of fortune which are accumulated upon Richardson's hero, and hence the fatal objection of Sir Charles Grandison being the 'Faultless monster that the world ne'er saw.'

To take the matter less gravely, and consider Sir Charles Grandison as a work of amusement, it must be allowed that the interest is destroyed in a great measure by the unceasing accordance given to the fortune as well as the character of the hero. We feel he is too much under the special protection of the author to need any sympathy of ours, and that he has nothing to dread from all the Polixenes, O'Haras, and so forth, in the world, so long as Richardson is decidedly his friend. Neither are our feelings much interested about him even while his fate is undetermined. He evinces too little passion, and certainly no preference, being clearly ready with heart and good-will to marry either Clementina or Harriet Byron, as circumstances may render most proper, and to bow gracefully upon the hand of the rejected lady and bid her adieu. . . . The real heroine of the work, and the only one in whose fortunes we take a deep and decided interest, is the unhappy Clementina, whose madness, and indeed her whole conduct, is sketched with the same exquisite pencil which drew the distresses of Clarissa."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Richardson.

"Of all representations of madness, that of Clementina, in the 'History of Sir Charles Grandison,' is the most deeply interesting. I know not whether even the madness of Lear is wrought up and expressed by so many little strictures of nature and genuine passion. Shall I say it is pedantry to prefer and compare the madness of Orestes in Euripides to this of Clementina?"—DR. WARTON.

"In the character of Sir Charles Grandison is a noble pattern of every private virtue, with sentiments so exalted as to render him equal to every public duty."—LORD LYTTELTON.

"Sir Charles Grandison, an Æneas kind of character."—CHARLES JAMES FOX Recollec., by S. Rogers, 1859, 63.

"This, though not indeed so pathetic as his former work, discovers more knowledge of life and manners, and is perfectly free from that indelicacy and high colouring which occasionally render the scenery of Clarissa dangerous to young minds."—DR. DRAKE Essays, v 63.

"Upon this work, also, [as well as Clarissa,] Mrs Barbauld has made many excellent observations, and pointed out both its blemishes and beauties with a very delicate and discerning hand."—LORD JEFFREY Edin Rev., v. 31.

Therefore read Mrs. Barbauld's critical notice of the work.

"Do you never read now? I am a little piqued that you say nothing of Sir Charles Grandison if you have not read it yet, read it for my sake. Perhaps Clarissa does not encourage you, but in my opinion it is much superior to Clarissa."—Edwards d Gibbon to Mrs Porter, Lausanne, 1766 Gibbon's Miscell Works, ed 1837, 227.

Judging from the opinion of the critic next to be cited, this advice would appear to be a doubtful proof of friendship:

"The Nouvelle Héloïse of Rousseau and Sir Charles Grandison of Richardson now form a heavy task even for the most ardent lover of romance." &c.—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Essays, 1860, iii, 529.

Yet one of our latest critics gives the same advice to his reader which Gibbon gave to Mrs. Porter:

"Of action," he says, "read Sir Charles Grandison," &c.—Ruskin's Elements of Drawing, 1857.

As an American, it does not become us to forget that the style of a great master of reasoning of our own country, a mental philosopher perhaps not second to any of modern times,—pronounced, indeed, by Robert Hall "the greatest of the sons of men," and by Sir James Mackintosh declared to be "perhaps unmatched, certainly unsurpassed, among men for power of subtle argument,"—was improved by a diligent study of the "beautiful flowing language" in which the tranquil satisfactions of Sir Charles and the tragic sorrows of Clementina are presented to the reader. See Dr Miller's

Life of Jonathan Edwards, D.D.: Sparks's Amer. Biog., 1st Ser., viii. 216.

V. RICHARDSON'S CORRESPONDENCE.

The Biographical Account of Richardson, by Mrs. Barbauld, prefixed to this collection, has already come under our favourable notice, and it would be easy to add to the compliments recorded:

"The public has great reason to be satisfied, we think, with Mrs Barbauld's share in this publication."—LORD JEFFREY Edin. Rev., v. 23

"Mrs Barbauld's Preface is altogether excellent."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Life, i chap v

"The Life . . . has been written with equal spirit and candour by Mrs Barbauld."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Richardson

"Mrs Barbauld's Life of the Author, Mr. Malone thinks extremely well drawn up."—A. CALDWELL to Bishop Percy, Sept. 18, 1804 Nichols's Hist. of Lit., 1858, viii. 53.

"Mrs Barbauld's Life of Richardson is admirable."—CHARLES JAMES FOX Recollec., by S. Rogers, 1859, 47.

Not so with the Correspondence which follows:

"The letters are certainly authentic, . . . but their publication, we think, was both improper and injudicious, as it can only tend to lower a very respectable character, without communicating any gratification or instruction to others. Although Richardson is not responsible for more than one-fifth part of the dulness exhibited in this collection," &c.—LORD JEFFREY Edin. Rev., v xxxii. republished in Jeffrey's Contrib to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 142-152.

"Richardson's Correspondence is certainly in many parts rather dull, as the reviewers justly say; but it is the dulness of Richardson, which interests me more than the wit of most reviewers. The book is a picture, and, on the whole, a most amiable picture, of Richardson. It contains important materials for literary history."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH Life, i chap v

"I have said that Richardson's correspondents were almost exclusively feminine. These female correspondents all, with one exception, bear out an opinion which I have long ventured to entertain of the general inferiority of women's letters."—MISS MITFORD Recollec. of a Lit. Life, chap xxxii. See, also, Phil. Museum, vii. 1, 104, xxxii. 41.

VI A GENERAL ESTIMATE OF RICHARDSON'S MERITS AND DEMERITS.

"Richardson, with the mere advantages of nature, improved by a very moderate progress in education, struck out at once, and of his own accord, into a new province of writing, in which he succeeded to admiration, and, what is more remarkable, he not only began, but finished, the plan on which he set out, leaving no room for any one after him to render it more complete, and not one of the various writers that have ever since attempted to imitate him has in any respect equalled or at all approached near him. This kind of romance is peculiarly his own, and I consider him as a truly great natural genius, as great and super-eminent in his way as Shakespeare and Milton were in theirs."—DR. YOUNG, author of the Night Thoughts

"Oh, Richardson! thou singular genius to my eyes! thou shalt form my reading in all times. If, forced by sharp necessity, my friend falls into indigence, if the mediocrity of my fortune is not sufficient to bestow on my children the necessary cares for their education, I will sell my books,—but thou shalt remain! yes, thou shalt rest in the same class with Moses, Homer, Euripides, and Sophocles, to be read alternately

"Oh, Richardson! I dare pronounce that the most veritable history is full of fictions, and thy romances are full of truths. History paints some individuals, thy painter the human species. . . Painter of nature, thou never liest. . . Thou hast had more admirers amongst us than in thine own country, and at this I rejoice."—DIDEROT Eloge on Richardson. Vide Disraeli's Curiosities of Lit., ed 1851, 194

"How applicable to Scott's works is the observation made by Madame du Deffand on Richardson's Novels, in one of her letters to Voltaire: 'La morale y est en action, et n'a jamais été traitée d'une manière plus intéressante. On meurt d'envie d'être parfait après cette lecture, et l'on croit que rien n'est si aisé.'"—LORD BYRON Lady Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron.

"To Richardson, who erred by trying to imitate Cervantes in elevating to poetry the realities of modern life, we cannot refuse the praise of a great talent for description, and of having at least manifested great vigour in his course, although the goal which he wished to reach was one entirely beyond his power."—FRED. VON SCHLEGEL Lects on the Hist. of Lit., Lect. XII, English trans.

"If Richardson's style is not good,—and of this we foreigners are no judges,—he will not live, for it is only by style a writer lives. . . But if Richardson has been forsaken only for vulgar expressions, unendurable by elegant society, he may revive, the revolution which is taking place, by lowering the aristocracy and raising the middling classes, will render less perceptible, or remove altogether, the traces of lowly habits and of an inferior language."—VICOMTE DE CHATEAUBRIAND Sketches of Eng. Lit., English trans., ii. 296, 1837

"Richardson has perhaps lost, though unjustly, a part of his popularity at home; but he still contributes to support the fame of his country abroad. The small blemishes of his diction are lost in translation. The changes of English manners, and the occasional home-ness of some of his representations, are unfelt by foreigners. Fielding will ever remain," &c.—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH Edin. Rev., xxv. 485; and in his Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 457.

And see FIELDING, HENRY, p. 594, col. 1, where the quotation is continued. See, also, p. 592, col. 2, 594 col. 2, and 595, col. 1, for Thackeray's, Talfourd's, John son's, and Schlosser's comparisons between Richardson and Fielding.

"The novels of Richardson are at once among the grandest and the most singular creations of human genius. They combine an accurate acquaintance with the freest libertinism, and the sternest professions of virtue,—a sporting with vicious casuistry, and the deepest horror of free-thinking—"he most stately ideas of paternal authority, and the most elaborate display of its abuses. . . After all, the general impression made on us by his works is virtuous."—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD New Month Mag. repub in his Miscell. Writings

"The most moral of all our novel-writers is Richardson, a writer of excellent intentions, and of very considerable capacity and genius, did he not possess the unfortunate talent of spinning out pieces of amusement into an immeasurable length."—DR. HUGH BLAIR: Lects on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect XXXVII.

"Richardson's nature is always the nature of sentiment and reflection, not of impulse or situation. He furnishes his characters, on every occasion, with the presence of mind of the author. He makes them act, not as they would from the impulse of the moment, but as they might upon reflection and upon a careful review of every motive and circumstance in their situation. They regularly sit down to write letters; and if the business of life consisted in letter-writing, and was carried on by the post, (like a Spanish game at chess,) human nature would be what Richardson represents it. All actual objects and feelings are blunted and deadened by being represented through a medium which may be true to reason, but is false in nature. He confounds his own point of view with that of the immediate actors in the scene, and hence presents you with a conventional and factitious nature, instead of that which is real. Richardson's wit was unlike that of any other writer,—his humour was so too. Both were the effect of intense activity of mind,—laboured, and yet completely effectual."—HAZLITT Lect on the English Novelists

"Richardson was well qualified to be the discoverer of a new style of writing, for he was a cautious, deep, and minute examiner of the human heart, and, like Cook or Parry, left neither head, bay, nor inlet behind him until he had traced its windings, and laid it down in his chart, with all its minute sinuosities, its depths, and its shadows. The style of Richardson was of that pliable and facile kind which could, with slight variety, be adapted to what best befitted his various personages. When he wrote in his highest characters, it was copious, expressive, and appropriate; but, through the imperfection of his education, not always strictly elegant, nor even accurate. The power of Richardson's painting in his deeper scenes of tragedy never has been, and probably never will be, excelled. Those of distressed innocence, as in the history of Clarissa and Clematissa, rend the very heart, and few, jealous of manly equanimity, should read them for the first time in presence of society. In others, where the same heroines, and particularly Clarissa, display a noble elevation of soul, rising above earthly considerations and earthly oppression, the reader is perhaps as much elevated towards a pure sympathy with virtue and religion, as uninspired composition can raise him. The lighter qualities of the novelist were less proper to this distinguished author than those which are allied to tragedy. Yet not even in these was Richardson deficient, and his sketches of this kind display the same accurate knowledge of humanity manifested in his higher efforts. His comedy is not overstrained, he never steps beyond the bounds of nature, and never sacrifices truth and probability to brilliancy and effect."—SIR WALTER SCOTT Life of Richardson

See, also, Sir Walter's Contrast between Richardson and Mackenzie and Sterne, in his Life of Henry Mackenzie.

"Richardson too often paints the impossible in character, but he is unrivalled in the elaborateness of representation."—SIR D. K. SANDFORD Rise and Progress of Lit.

"The great excellence of Richardson's novels consists we think in the unparalleled minuteness and copiousness of his descriptions, and in the pains he takes to make us thoroughly acquainted with every particular in the character and situation of the personages with whom we are occupied. . . In this art Richardson is undoubtedly without an equal, and, if we except De Foe, without a competitor, we believe, in the whole history of literature. . . This we certainly think the chief merit of Richardson's productions, for, great as his knowledge of the human heart and his powers of pathetic description must be admitted to be, we are of opinion that he might have been equalled in those particulars by many whose productions are infinitely less interesting "That his pieces were all intended to be strictly moral, is indisputable, but it is not quite so clear that they will uniformly be found to have this tendency. . . Richardson's good people, in short, are too wise and formal ever to appear in the light of desirable companions, or to excite in a youthful mind any wish to resemble them. The gaiety of all his characters, too, is extremely girlish and silly, and is much more like the prattle of spoiled children than the wit and pleasantry of persons acquainted with the world. The diction throughout is heavy, vulgar, and embarrassed, though the interest of the tragical scenes is too powerful to allow us to attend to any inferior consideration."—LORD JEFFREY Edin. Rev., v. 43, 44, and in his Contrib to Edin. Rev., ed 1853, 151, 152; and repub, Swift and Richardson, 1852, cr. 8vo, (Longman's Trav. Lib.)

Much more is before us,—and unprinted it must remain; for our limits have been reached, yet, ere we close, an unperformed promise claims a few words on

VII. RICHARDSON'S CHARACTER AS A MAN.

"Richardson," exclaims Lord Byron, "the vainest and luckiest of living authors!" (i.e. while alive;) but, whilst 'vanity' can be denied neither to the novelist nor his poetical critic, much more must be said of the former, if justice is to be awarded him.

"A kind and generous master, he was eager to encourage his servants to persevere in the same course of patient labour by which he had himself attained fortune. . . . His hospitality was of the most liberal, as well as the most judicious, kind. One of his correspondents describes him as sitting at his door, like an old parson, and inviting all who passed by to enter and be refreshed.—and this," says Mrs Barbauld, 'whether they brought with them the means of amusing their host, or only required his kind notice and that of the family.' He was generous and benevolent to distressed authors, a class of men with whom his profession brought him into contact; and had occasion, more than once, to succour Dr Johnson during his days of poverty, and to assist his efforts to force himself into public notice. . . . If we look yet closer into Richardson's private life, (and who loves not to know the slightest particulars concerning a man of his genius?) we find so much to praise, and so very little deserving censure, that we almost think we are reading the description of one of the amiable characters he has drawn in his own works. A love of the human species; a desire to create happiness and to witness it, a life undisturbed by passion, and spent in doing good, pleasures which centred in elegant conversation, in bountiful hospitality, in the exchange of all the kindly intercourse of life,—marked the worth and unostentatious simplicity of the good man's character."—SIR WALTER SCOTT, Life of Richardson

"The great author was accustomed to be adored. A gentler wind never puffed mortal vanity. Enraptured spinsters flung tea-leaves round him, and incensed him with the coffee-pot. Matrons kissed the slippers they had worked for him. There was a halo of virtue round his nightcap. All Europe had thrilled, panted, admired, trembled, wept, over the pages of the immortal little kind honest man with the round punch. Harry came back quite glowing and proud at having a bow from him. 'Ah,' says he, 'my lord, I am glad to have seen him!'"—THACKERAY, The Virginians, l ch. xxvi.

"His moral character was in the highest degree exemplary and amiable. He was temperate, industrious, and upright, punctual and honourable in all his dealings; and with a kindness of heart, and a liberality and generosity of disposition, that must have made him a very general favourite, even if he had never acquired any literary distinction."—LORD JEFFREY, Contrib to Edin Rev, 147

But we have not left it to this late page of our work to do justice to Richardson's diffusive benevolence. See GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, p. 689, col. 2, supra.

— Surely a character so bright as this will hardly be obscured by the admission that the hospitable author preferred the society of men and women who liked him and his books to that of those who were indifferent to both, (is he the only author of whom this can be said?) and the acknowledgment that many of his private letters refer to particulars connected with the personages, the plots, and the dénouements of his novels. Respecting the latter subject—in the proper understanding of which, the character of many authors is concerned—a few words of explanation will not be out of place. No inconsiderable penalty paid for successful authorship is the burden of a heavy correspondence,—originating with the kindness, the vanity, or the ostentation of those who are disposed to encourage, congratulate, and patronize newly-acquired popularity, or are not unwilling to share in its honours and participate in its fruits. It is not enough to write, letters are desired in return; these are elicited by inquiries, and inquiries naturally and necessarily refer to that which is, or which is assumed to be, a matter of public concern. To these inquiries, a sense of courtesy, an emotion of gratitude, a regard to interest, or a satisfaction in acquaintanceship regarded as a tribute to real or supposed merit, insures responses,—more or less confidential, according to the disposition or taste of the one addressed. But, whether distantly polite or tediously autobiographical, letters thus elicited from an author can only refer to himself and to his works, and if a collection of such letters be published, they will very probably, but very unjustly, be censured by the thoughtless critic for obtrusive egotism. He who remembers the deluge of missives which overwhelmed Richardson on the publication of the first two volumes of Pamela and the first four volumes of Clariissa—not to refer to other postal embarrassments of the afflicted novelist—will not be surprised either at the bulk (less, indeed, than one volume of the four volumes which compose his Correspondence) or the character of the author's epistolary compositions.

Riley, J. C., M.D., Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics in the National Medical College; one of the Physicians of Providence Hospital, Washington, D.C. A Compend of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, for the Use of Students, Phila., 1869, 8vo.

Riley, Captain James, a native of Middletown, Conn., d. at sea, March 15, 1840, became widely known by an Authentic Narrative of the Loss of the American Brig Commerce on the Western Coast of Africa, Aug. 1815, with the Sufferings of her Surviving Officers and Crew, &c., N. York, 1816; Lon., 1817, 4to; Hartford, 1817, 8vo; 1846, 8vo.

"From the crude notes, journals, and log-books which Capt. James Riley furnished, [Anthony] Bleecker drew up gratuitously that popular 'Narrative of the Brig Commerce,' which obtained so wide a circulation both in this country and abroad."—Dr. J. W. Francis: Old New York, ed. 1858, 69.

"We do not remember to have met with a personal narrative more deeply distressing or more painfully interesting."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1817, 221-221.

See Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript The Old English Ballads and Romances, edited, with Introductions, Glossary, &c., by J. W. Hales and F. J. Furnivall, assisted by Professor Child, W. Chappell, &c., (with fac-simile of a page of the MS.) Lon., 1867-68, 3 vols. 8vo; large and fine paper, r. 8vo.

"This precious Manuscript contains 196 Pieces, (some Fragments,) in nearly 40,000 lines, and is in a hand of James I's reign. The list of its contents shows how many unprinted Ballads and Romances it contains,—for what Percy printed of the manuscript must be considered unprinted for our purpose."—Editor's Preface

He also edited Chappell's Musical Magazine, (see Chappell's Music of the Olden Time, &c., 1865, 2 vols. r. 8vo.) See Thomas Tallis's (g. v.) Full Cathedral Service, and his Order of Daily Service, and Edward Lowe's Order of Chanting the Cathedral Service, North, Hon. Roger, No. 6; OVERBURY, THOMAS. Some years since, Dr. Rimbault issued proposals for the publication, by subscription, (in 4to Pts., 6s. each,) of Reliques of Ancient Music, Sacred and Secular, &c., 13th to 17th Centuries; and he contemplated preparing for the press a selection of ballads, &c. from the Pepys MSS. in Magdalene College, Cambridge. We commend to all intelligent lovers of harmony the new edition of F. J. Fétis's Biographie Universelle des Musiciens et Bibliographie Générale de la Musique, Paris, 1860-68, 8 vols. r. 8vo. Dr. R. is now (1869) engaged on a Glossary of Musical Terms.

Rimmel, Eugene, a London perfumer, about 1860 read before the Society of Arts a paper on the History and Commercial Development of the Art of Perfumery; and more recently was called upon, as one of the jury at the Great Exhibition, to draw up the official Report of the Department of Perfumery. Having extended his researches, he published the results in (1) The Book of Perfumes, with about 250 illustrations, Lon., 1865, or. 8vo; 4th ed., 1866; Phila., 1867, 8vo; a volume of great interest in a historical, antiquarian, scientific, and social point of view. The illustrations of the domestic habits of the Egyptians, Jews, Asiatics, Greeks, Romans, &c. are calculated to instruct as well as amuse. 2. Ripley, Ezra, D. D., 1751-1841, a native of Woodstock, Conn.; minister at Concord, Mass.; graduated at Harvard University, 1776, pub. a number of single sermons, 1792-1828; and assisted other "Citizens of Concord" in the preparation of A History of the Fight at Concord on the 19th of April, 1775, Concord, Mass., 1827, 8vo. See Sprague's Annals, viii., Unitarian, 1865, 112.

Ripley, George or Sir George, or Gregory, a Canon of Bridlington, and a learned chemist and poet, temp. Henry VII., studied in France and Italy with such success that Innocent VIII. absolved him from the observance of the rules of his Order, that he might prosecute his studies with more freedom. This indulgence was not confirmed by his convent, and he turned Carmelite at St. Botolph's in Lincolnshire, and died in that fraternity in 1490. 1. Compvnd of Alchymie, or, the ancient hidden Arte of Alchymie containing the right and perfectest means to make the Philosopher's Stone, aurum potable, with other excellent experiments, divided into 12 gates, Lon., 1591, 4to. *Bibl. "His chemical poems are nothing more than the doctrines of alchemy clothed in plain language and a very rugged versification. . . . These pieces have no other merit than that of serving to develop the history of chemistry in England. They certainly contribute nothing to the state of our poetry. . . . Ashmole says that Ripley, during his long stay at Rhodes, gave the knights of Malta £100,000 annually towards maintaining the war against the Turks, [Theat. Chémic. Brit. p. 458.] Ashmole could not have made this incredible assertion without supposing a circumstance equally incredible,—that Ripley was in actual possession of the philosopher's stone."—WARTON: ubi supra

Fuller of The Dial, 1840-41; with C. A. Dana, Parke Godwin, and J. S. Dwight, of The Harbinger, 1844-48; and from 1849 to the present date (1868) literary editor of the New York Tribune. Contributor to the Christian Examiner, (articles on Degerando, Herder, Pestalozzi, Sir J. Mackintosh, Martineau's Rationale of Religious Inquiry, State of Religion in France, &c.) Southern Literary Messenger, Putnam's and Harper's Magazines, &c. Associate editor, in conjunction with Mr. C. A. Dana, of Appleton's New American Cyclopædia, New York, 1858-63, 16 vols. r. 8vo. Of the many critical notices of this work, or portions of it, which we have read, the most are highly commendatory; a few are otherwise. Its value would be greatly increased by a General Index, such as that which completes the Encyclopædia Britannica, Edin., 1853-60, 22 vols. 4to, which should stand on the same shelf with the New American Cyclopædia; and the latter should be supplemented by Appleton's American Annual Cyclopædia, r. 8vo, 1861-70 et seq.

Ritchie, Mrs. Anna Cora, a daughter of Mr. Samuel G. Ogden, born in Bordeaux, France, removed in early life to the city of New York; was married in her 15th year to Mr. James Mowatt, of New York, and after his death became (in 1854) the wife of Mr. William F. Ritchie, of Richmond, Virginia, who died October 2, 1868. From 1845 to 1854 Mrs. Mowatt performed on the stage, both in England and America, with great success. This lady gained some literary celebrity under her assumed titles of Isabel and Helen Berkley, and a still wider reputation by the productions ushered into the world under her own names. 1. Polayo; or, The Cavern of Covadonga, in Five Cantos, by Isabel, 1836. This poetical romance elicited some adverse criticism, which was responded to by the authoress (still preserving her incognito) in a satirical effusion entitled—2. Reviewers Reviewed, 1837. 3. "If one struggling sister in the great human family, while listening to the history of my life, gains courage to meet and brave severest trials, if she learns to look upon them as blessings in disguise, if she be strengthened in the performance of 'daily duties,' however 'hardly paid,' if she be inspired with faith in the power imparted to a strong will whose end is good,—then I am amply rewarded for my labor. ANNA CORA MOWATT."

Ritchie, Leitch, b at Greenock, Scotland, in 1800, after some experience as a banker's clerk in Greenock and as a merchant's clerk in Glasgow, for the second time resorted to London, resumed the literary connections he had made on a former visit, and henceforth remained a littérateur by profession until his death, Jan. 16, 1865. He published upwards of thirty original volumes, edited and partly wrote between forty and fifty more, and edited and contributed to many periodicals. The best-known of his volumes are the following: 1. Head Pieces and Tail Pieces, Tales, Lon., 12mo. 2. London Night Entertainments, 8vo. 3. Romance of History, France, 1831, 3 vols. 12mo, N York, 2 vols. 8vo. See NEELE, HENRY, No 3 4 Tales and Confessions, Lon. p. 8vo. 5. Ireland, Picturesque and Romantic, 1837-38, 2 vols. r. 8vo. 6. Mr. Ritchie's illustrated records of travel (of which he published twelve volumes) were prefaced by two series written for Charles Heath, entitled Turner's Annual Tour and Heath's Picturesque Annual. He also edited for Smith & Elder the Library of Romance, and projected in 1832, with Thomas Roscoe, Legends and Traditions of the Castles of England, (see Lon. Athen., 1832, 82.)

He was one of the originators of The Wanderer, and (with Wm. Kennedy) of the Englishman's Magazine; was co-editor, with J. A. St. John, of the London Weekly Review, editor of The Era and The Indian News; contributor to these periodicals, and to the Westminster Review, Foreign Quarterly Review, the Athenæum, and other magazines, journals, &c., and for some time officiated as co-editor, with the intelligent proprietors, of W. and R. Chambers's Journal,—also assisting them in other publications. Some of his tales will be found in a collection entitled The Pic Nic Papers, edited by Dickens, Lon., 1859, 8vo; N York, 1859, 8vo. See also, PICKEN, ANDREW, No. 7; PRINGLE, THOMAS, (and Lon. Ritson, Isaac, 1761-1789, a native of Emont Bridge, near Penrith, Scotland, after teaching school from 1777 to 1781, removed first to Edinburgh, and subsequently to London, where he supported himself by writing medical articles for the Monthly Review. He pub. an excellent translation of Homer's Hymn to Venus, 4to, the Preface to James Clarke's Survey of the Lakes, 1787, fol., 2d ed., 1790, fol., and several other things. He also left in MS. a masterly translation of Hesiod's Theogony, and Essays on Moral and Philosophical Subjects. His abilities were highly commended. See Hutchinson's Hist of Cumberland, Chalmers's Bigg. Dict., xxvi. 237; Disraeli's Miscell of Lit., ed. 1853, 81.

Ritson, Joseph, 1752-1803, a native of Stockton-upon-Tees, Durham, opened a conveyancer's office in London, but, being supported by the profits of his office,—Deputy High-Bailiff of the Duchy of Lancaster,—he employed his time chiefly in the preparation and publication of antiquarian books, and in commenting, not in the most amiable spirit, on the performances of labourers in the same fields of research. In the last-named department—the critical—he has already come under our notice: see PERRY, THOMAS, D.D., No. 5. His asperity provoked general indignation, and the impety obtruded in his Essay on Abstinence from Animal Food (vide No. 29, infra) excited vehement disgust; but much is to be Forgiven to the unsound mind; and such undoubtedly Ritson's was. In his later days his mental disorder increased, and he died in a fit of madness. As a laborious and generally accurate investigator, he merits high commendation. The following is a list of his works: 1. Verses addressed to the Ladies of Stockton. In the Newcastle Miscellany, 1772. Also separately, Newcastle, s. a., 12mo. Also at end of Haslewood's Account of Ritson, Lon., 1824, or. 8vo. 2. Office of a Lord High Steward of England, 1776, 8vo. 3. The Descent of the Crown of England, 1778, fol., sheet: privately printed; published, 1788. 4. The St. Patrick's Jubilee; or, Shakespeare in all his Glory, Newo., 1781, 8vo.

"Of great rarity. This pamphlet consists of extracts from Shakespeare applied to most of the principal inhabitants of that town, descriptive of their several characters."—Hallwell's Shakespeareana, p. 27, No. 74

5. Observations on the three first volumes [1774, '78, '81, 4to] of the [Warton's] History of English Poetry, in a Familiar Letter to the Author, Lon., 1782, 4to. Most abusive, yet often just.

"Above all men, the late Laureat, whom this pitiable critic has loaded with the coarsest epithets, has taught us what use to make of dark and forgotten materials."—SIR S. E. BARDOES. Oss. Lit., ed. 1806, i. 66.

"Ritson overlaboured and overloaded his prefatory matter to the 'Robin Hood Ballads' he wrote not only with too much of an antiquarian spirit, but too much in an antiquarian style."—*Lon. The historical Preface to A Lytell Geste of Robin Hode, (see GUTCH, JOHN MATTHEW; new ed., 1853, 2 vols. 8vo,) the compiler tells us, is "not grounded on the Documents used by Ritson." Fowle, 576, $14.50. It is to be observed (see Nichols's Illustr. of Lit. Hist., viii, 1858, 376-377) Park's letter to Bp. Percy) that in the preparation of this work Ritson was greatly indebted to Thomas Park, (see No. 9, supra), a service which Ritson repaid with ingratitude and insult. Joseph Haslewood (see No. 40, infra) made large collections for a new edition, (see Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 191, 674, 685, 686, 693, 706,) never completed; and additions and alterations, we presume Haslewood's, were pub. in Brydges's Censura Literaria. Respecting the author and his work, Sir Egerton thus discourses

"Mr. Joseph Ritson, unilluminated by a particle of taste or fancy, and remarkable only for the unceasing drudgery with which he dedicated his life to one of the humblest departments of literary antiquities, and for the bitter intolerance and foul abuse with which he communicated his dull acquisitions to the public, was equally [with Herbert in his ed. of Amer's Typ. Antig. of G. Brit.] indebted to the same sources, [Bibliotheca Farnesiana, 1798, Bibliotheca Steevensiana, 1800,] particularly in his 'Bibliotheca Poetica,' 1802. Whoever is acquainted with that strange, but not totally useless, book, will wonder how it was possible for a man, with such a fund of materials before him, to complete a work so utterly lifeless and stupid, so uncheered by one single ray of light, or one solitary flower admitted even by chance from the numerous and varied gardens of poetry over which he had been travelling! But, poor unhappy spirit, thou art gone! Perhaps thy restless temper was disease: and mayst thou find peace in the grave!" [Note. He died in August or September, 1803. See a very affecting account of his death in the British Critic at that period.—SIR S. E. BARDOES. Oss. Lit., ed. 1806, vol. i. 66]

29. An Essay on Abstinence from Animal Food as a Moral Duty, 1802, 8vo, pp. 236. A scorching critique on this work, ascribed to Dr. John Brown, but really, it appears, (see T. Moore's Memoirs, vii. 1856, 18,) by Rev. Sydney Smith and Lord Brougham, will be found in The Edinburgh Review, April, 1803, 128-136. The reviewers, whatever may have been their intention, have failed to be complimentary, as will be seen by a brief extract:

"Hear how this puny, pitiful worm lifts its feeble cry to arraign the order of nature, and scoff at the Omniscience which, for wise purposes, though quite unknown to us, suffers it to crawl upon the earth. . . . Before taking leave of this most nauseous performance and of its wretched author, we trust forever, a few words remain to be added upon the style in which all the strange absurdities and filthy abominations of his perverted brain are delivered. We do not mean to go farther than the external qualities,—the matchless ludicrousness of the other graphy and typography. . . We now most joyfully leave the Essay on Abstinence from Animal Food to that oblivion which awaits it, and from which its absurdities and singularities, however gross and wicked, are of too dull a cast to save it."—Fp. 136, 136.

The Quarterly Reviewer was charged with "killing his man," (see KZAM, JOHN), and perhaps there were those who were disposed to charge the same crime on the Edinburgh critics; but, although Ritson survived this attack less than six months, we do not believe that his

Let itself be snuffed out by this article."

Privately printed, 100 copies. Fowle, 585, $14 50. See No. 25. 39. Fairy Tales, now first collected, to which are prefixed Two Dissertations, the one on Pygmies, the other on Fairies, Lon., 1831, 8vo Fowle, 586, $14 50. 40. Letters of Joseph Ritson, edited by his nephew, Joseph Frank, Esq., with his Life, by Sir N. Harris Nicolas, Pickering, 1833, 2 vols. cr. 8vo: Fowle, 589, $29. Noticed in Gent. Mag., 1834, i. 202. To these vols. must be added, Some Account of the Life and Publications of the late Joseph Ritson, Esq., by Joseph Haslewood, 1824, 8vo.

Some collectors may be surprised at the number of works compiled by this industrious antiquary. They have probably been deceived by the incorrect and dishonest advertisement of some London booksellers, viz.:

"Ritson's Antiquarian Works, complete, with Life and Letters, by Sir N. H. Nicolas, uniformly printed, 1827-33, 12 vols. p. 8vo, pub £6 15s 6d

"No library can be called complete in old English lore which has not the whole of the productions of this laborious and successful antiquary"—Athenæum

Now, as these 12 vols. contain only the following works, printed by Pickering, it will be seen that the set is hardly "complete": I. Ancient Songs and Ballads, 2 vols.; II. Robin Hood, 2 vols.; III. Fairy Tales, 1 vol.; IV. Annals of the Caledonians, Picts, and Scots, 2 vols.; V. Memoirs of the Celts or Gauls, 1 vol.; VI. Ancient Popular Poetry, 1 vol.; VII. Life of King Arthur, 1 vol.; VIII. Letters and Life, (No. 40, supra), 2 vols.

this was purchased, at the sale of his books, by Longman & Co. for £45 8s., and at their sale in 1842 produced only £12 12s. Many of Ritson's works (Dr. Morris's) were sold at auction in Philadelphia in 1867. The commentaries of Sir Walter Scott on the querulous antiquary, cited and referred to in the course of this article (see, also, his Life of Leyden, his essay on Romance in Encyc. Brit., repub. in his Prose Works, and his letter to George Ellis, Oct. 14, 1803,—on Ritson's death,—in Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. xii.) must be carefully consulted. See, further, Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 10, (1863,) 2098; Corser's Collect. Anglo-Poetica, 1860-61, 2 Pta. sm. 4to, (Chetham Soc.); Nichols's Lit. Anec., vii., Index, and Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii., 1858, Index; Surtees's Durham, 1823, i. 523; 1824, ii. 351; Gent. Mag., lxxiii., lxxiv.; Edin. Rev., xii. 466, xiv. 129; Blackw. Mag., xlv. 6.

"Ritson cannot be named without respect for his industry, and pity for the unfortunate irritability which placed him, throughout his life, in a state of bitter and unremitted warfare—with beef-steaks and Revelation;—Pinkerton and Snorro,—with his best friends and half the letters in the alphabet. But, though his outrages may provoke a smile, he has ably pointed out the weaker parts of the Arabian and Gothic systems, as Mr Dunlop (in the History of Fiction) calls them, of Percy and Warton."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

"In Theron's form, mark Ritson next contend;

Fierce, meagre, pale, no commentator's friend"

Pursuits of Lit., Dial First, and Note 86

"Ritson is the oddest but most honest of all our antiquarians"—SOUTHEY. Life and Corresp., chap ix

"A man of acute observation, profound research, and great labour. These valuable attributes were unhappily combined with an eager irritability of temper, which induced him to treat antiquarian trifles with the same seriousness which men of the world reserve for matters of importance, and disposed him to drive controversies into personal quarrels, by neglecting, in literary debate, the courtesies of ordinary society. It ought to be said, however, by one who knew him well, that this irritability of disposition was a constitutional and physical infirmity, and that Ritson's extreme attachment to the severity of truth corresponded to the vigour of his criticisms upon the labours of others."—SIR WALTER SCOTT. Introduc. Remarks prefixed to his Ancient Minstrelsy, &c.

See, also, Sir Walter's comments to the same effect in Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1829, 135.

His diet too acid, his temper too sour,

SIR WALTER SCOTT. Song of One Volume More.

The literary antiquary should procure. A Bibliographical and Critical Account of the Rarest Books in the English Language, &c., by J. Payne Collier, F.S.A., 1865, 2 vols. 8vo; N. York, 1866, 4 vols. p. 8vo. 75 on i. p., and 5 on India paper; and Bibliography of the Popular, Poetical, and Dramatic Literature of England previous to 1660, by W. Rittenhouse, David, LL.D., April 8, 1732-June 26, 1796, is generally styled a native of Germantown, but he was born on Paper Mill Run, Roxborough Township, near Germantown, and not far from the city of Philadelphia. After some years' experience in the country as a maker of clocks and mathematical instruments, in which he displayed wonderful ingenuity, in 1770 he removed to Philadelphia, where he pursued his business with great reputation, employing his leisure hours in attending the meetings and contributing to the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, in the presidency of which, in 1791, he succeeded Dr. Benjamin Franklin. After employment, in 1779, 1784, 1786, 1787, and 1789, in the settlement of State boundaries, and acting as Treasurer of Pennsylvania from 1777 to 1789, he was in 1792 appointed Director of the United States Mint, which post he retained until the year preceding his death. He published an Oration on Astronomy, delivered before the American Philosophical Society in 1775, (Phila., 1775, 4to,) and, as already noticed, many papers on astronomical, philosophical, and mathematical subjects in the first four vols. of the Transactions of that learned body. See Dr. Benj. Rush's Eulogium on him, Phila., 1796, 8vo; Memoirs of his Life, by his nephew, Wm. Barton, M.A., 1813, 8vo, his Life in National Portrait-Gallery of Distinguished Americans, vol. ii., 1836, (repub. 1852, &c.); his Life in Sparks's Lib. of Amer. Biog., 1st Ser., vol. vii., by James Renwick. See, also, Dict. Hist., Supp.; Hutton's Dict.; Rees's Cyc.; WYNN, JAMES, M.D., LL.D., No. 2.

"We have supposed Mr. Rittenhouse second to no astronomer living, that in genius he must be the first, because he is calculus taught!"—THOMAS JEFFERSON. Notes on Virginia, 1782.
